Who I am...

My name is Kenny I'm the owner of Fight'n Ca. LLC. Through this page, I want to provide a snapshot of my personality before we work together. I started this charitable for-profit because of my personal experience with cancer. I was diagnosed with Stage II Hodgkin's Lymphoma at the age of 17. Just a week before my 18th birthday, I was sent to the hospital because of a noticeable bump on my neck.

Little did my family know, that bump put our lives on hold. Fear, anxiety, confusion, nobody knew what was next. We met my oncologist and within a couple of weeks, I had started chemotherapy.

I was a very "normal" kid before my diagnosis. I went to class, played sports, and was considered a jokester. When I was diagnosed, on July 28th, 2015, I had to mature quickly. I put it upon myself not to let this diagnosis control the way I thought, how I lived, or change who I was at the core.

That was my motto over the next 6 months of my life. Yes, I had to get treatment, it took time out of my weeks. I still did everything on my personal agenda. While many expected me to be at home, sheltered due to treatment, that's rarely where they found me. I embarked on many rounds of golf, went out to eat (when my wallet allowed me to), and continued to work and coach my high school golf team.

Some days were easier than others, but that's the reality of this disease. I recognize I was very fortunate to do all of this while enduring treatment. Now several years in remission, my fight has not slowed down. I continuously present my story to help others by creating light when darkness presents itself. I strive to grow my clothing line as a resource to combat the physical and emotional exhaustion cancer presents.

I will jump on any opportunity to support a family, or child that has been diagnosed. I hope to use my journey to support someone else. I'm not a doctor, I'm just a man with the vision of supporting others through difficult times.
