SoCo Management Group and FuelPrime Announce Strategic Partnership

Partnership combines fuel intelligence, managed services and field execution into a full-circle solution for fuel operators

ELGIN, Ill. — October 2, 2026 — SoCo Management Group, LLC, a veteran-owned provider of managed compliance, field services and operational support, today announced a strategic partnership with FuelPrime to expand fuel intelligence and wet stock management capabilities for customers throughout the United States.

FuelPrime's technology provides advanced fuel-system analysis, including inventory and delivery reconciliation, loss detection, tank calibration analysis and operational reporting. SoCo will incorporate those capabilities into its broader managed-services model, helping customers move from data to action more efficiently.

SoCo is also utilizing AI-enabled technology to help extract, normalize and analyze information from multiple operational systems. By combining that information with experienced human oversight, SoCo can help identify patterns, exceptions and potential issues earlier, giving customers better information to make decisions with less operational and compliance risk.

The partnership strengthens SoCo's cradle-to-grave service model by connecting managed services, field services, data intelligence and specialized technology partners within a single operational framework.

"What we are building at SoCo is a full-circle solution," said Jon Marinas, Founder and CEO of SoCo Management Group. "We can identify an issue, bring together the relevant data, determine what action is required, coordinate the work in the field and manage it through final resolution. FuelPrime strengthens the intelligence side of that process and helps us complete that circle."

Rather than providing customers with another stand-alone dashboard, SoCo's model is designed to connect intelligence to action and action to resolution. When an issue is identified, SoCo can support the investigation, manage compliance requirements, coordinate service activity and follow the issue through completion.

"FuelPrime has always been focused on helping operators better understand what is happening within their fuel systems and giving them the intelligence needed to identify losses, discrepancies and other operational concerns," said Jakub Bularz, Operations Director at FuelPrime. "Our partnership with SoCo takes that a step further by connecting the intelligence generated by FuelPrime with a managed-services organization that understands how to evaluate the information, coordinate the appropriate response and follow an issue through resolution. We believe that combination creates significant value for U.S. operators and provides a strong foundation for expanding FuelPrime's capabilities in the U.S. market."

The partnership will also support customer pilot programs, allowing operators to evaluate FuelPrime technology within their existing fueling environments before considering broader deployment.
