

Taking Action

Across The Country

Alzheimer's doesn't stop — and neither do the dedicated people (and pets) across the country striving to raise awareness and funds to fight the disease.

Watertown, Massachusetts

Julie Rivers learned yoga from her late mother and continues the practice to honor her.

San Francisco, California

Humanitarian artist Kunle Adewale hosted a virtual exhibition and discussion about art, aging and dementia.

Independence, Oregon

English teacher and writer Benjamin Gorman organized a team of authors for "Writing Against the Darkness," a virtual write-a-thon event to raise funds for the Association.

Mount Pleasant, Iowa

Staff at Sunnybrook at Mt. Pleasant Assisted Living and Memory Care had some cheeky fun for the cause. Decorative toilets — painted in the Alzheimer's Association signature purple — were left in yards across town and removed in exchange for a suggested donation.

Lynnwood, Washington

Darrel, a very good boy indeed, took up skateboarding to raise Alzheimer's awareness and funds for the Association.

Cedar City, Utah

Laci Fay, who hosts a YouTube channel on all things vintage, recreated her grandmother's wedding photo and held a livestream event to talk about Alzheimer's. Fay's grandmother is living with dementia.

Mount Sneffels, Uncompahgre National Forest, Colorado

John Osmundson and his daughter Leilani took the fight to new heights in honor of John's late father.
