

Trail Etiquette- Hand Signals -----We aren't just waving!

When you see riders coming the other direction on the trail proper hand signals are a fast and effective way of letting them know how many are in your group.

Always know your place in line, and how many riders are behind you. If you are in a group of 8 and there is someone coming your way, the leader will hold up 5 fingers to let the oncoming riders know there are at least 5 people behind you. Each person does this based on their position of line. If there are 5 or more riders behind you, you hold up a 5. Four riders you would hold up 4 fingers and so on. The end rider will hold up their fist as to say there is no one behind me. Youth riders we encourage to understand the rules of hand signs but not use them until they gain some experience as this could cause them to lose control of their vehicle.
