WHY YOU SHOULD TEACH YOUR KIDS ABOUT PERSONAL FINANCE

The school of life is in session!

Summer is the perfect time to teach the next generation about important life skills like personal finance. While traditional classroom learning is put on pause, learning important life skills should be put into play with well.....

PLAY!

You can make learning personal finance skills fun by using play and fun techniques to get your kids to latch on to important financial concepts at any age!

According to a University of Cambridge research, kids start developing good financial habits around the age of seven. You are always being observed by little eyes. They'll notice whether you put down plastic every time you go to the grocery store or use cash. They will also notice if you and your partner are fighting about money. When kids become older, they will be far more likely to follow your healthy example if you set one.

Give your children more than just an allowance just because...

Pay children commissions for household tasks they complete, such as mowing the lawn, washing the dishes, or cleaning their room. Your children will learn that money is earned and isn't just given to them thanks to this idea.

If your teen wants some money, then help them find a job. Better yet, help them capitalize on their talents! These days, it's easier than ever for your teen to start up their own business and turn a profit.

KEEP YOURSELF SHARP!

We challenge you to find all of these words!
