WHEN WOULD I NEED A FINANCIAL ADVOCATE?

In order to help you decide when and if you need a financial advocate, we put together some scenarios below that help highlight certain situations of when you would need to hire a financial advocate to help fight on your behalf.

These hypothetical scenarios are just a few situations that people get into in real life, but there are so many different variables that cause your situation to be unique.

In order to get the best possible answer as to whether you need a financial advocate or not it's best to get a free consultation with VeriAccount at 202-280-0722

Scenario #1

You just get back from serving your military duty overseas. Everything is brand new because you've been used to a different kind of normal for years so it's hard for you to adjust to the way things are back home. In the middle of trying to reconnect with your family and catch up on everything you've missed while you were gone, you forget to pay a few bills and keep experiencing interruptions in vital utilities.

In this situation a financial advocate can help keep on top of bills so that no bills go without payment and can help you make sure that you are being charged for the correct services and that no mistakes are being made on your bills.

Scenario #2

You get into a really serious accident where you just got out of a medically induced coma and so you're still feeling not quite like yourself and not on top of your game. Your family is busy with other affairs and so you don't want to bother them with making sure that your medical bills are all in line. This situation is where you would hire a financial advocate to make sure that your medical bills are being charged appropriately for the services that you needed.

A financial advocate can save you and your family from the stress of trying to figure out what medical billing codes mean and instead you all can focus on healing as a family.

KEEP YOURSELF SHARP!

We challenge you to find all of these words!
