This is a big help for the surrounding area at the holidays for those that are in need.

Steve L - Javelina Street Tacos

One javalina shoulder, butt, or both depending on how much you want!

Use byrons butt rub from Costco.

Apply generous amounts and wrap in cellophane. Set in fridge over night!

Depending on the type of smoker you have, adjust it to 175-225 degrees. Use an internal temperature probe to watch the temp as to not have to open the smoker each time! You lose way to much heat doing this. Cook until internal temp is 175-195 deg. Move meat to an aluminum pan and cover with green enchilada sauce, and green chilies. or red enchilada sauce and chipotle peppers chopped up. Cover with aluminum foil and raise smoker temp to 300 deg. Cook until internal temp is 225 deg for about an hour and a half. Remove aluminum foil, meat should shred just by stick a fork in it, or the meat will be pulled loose from the bone! Remove meat and shred in a pan or bowl. Add drippings/juice from your cooking pan as needed to make moist. Serve with tomatoes, onions, cilantro, and your favorite hot sauce. in a corn or flour tortilla.

Rock Island Armory 22 TCM (FS)

Member Review

If you've ever seen a 22 TCM, it kind of makes you wonder . . . what were these guys smoking when they created this thing? A 22 caliber pistol in a 1911 format that will shoot a 39gr hollow point at 2,000+ fps out of a 5 barrel? This I had to see.

Many of you will know that I'm a pistol fanatic at heart, but prefer a rifle for song dogs due to distance and need for terminal velocity and energy transfer. When I first heard of the 22 TCM I was intrigued to say the least.

I was able to get my hands on the FS single stack model which came with both a 22 TCM as well as a 9mm conversion barrel and spring. The single stack magazine holds 10 rounds, plus one up the pipe. (The double stack model holds 17+1). It shipped from the factory set with the TCM barrel, although the conversion to 9mm takes all of about 20 seconds once you've done it once or twice and the magazines are interchangeable with the 9mm!

39gr 22 TCM size comparison to a standard 223 – 55gr

When I pulled it out of the box the first thing that impressed me was the stippled polymer grip and smooth action of the gun. The adjustable rear sites and dovetail fiber optic front site made it easy to get on target and stay there.

A commonly compared neighbor to the 22 TCM is the 5.7x28, which runs about 2200 fps, (150-200 fps faster than the TCM) and has a greater variety of bullets. In my research, the TCM cost nearly a grand less, and (my opinion) was just a prettier sidearm due to my love for the 1911 format. Ammunition as of December was roughly $27.99 for a box of 100 and readily available at almost any Cal-Ranch store where the 5.7x28 was roughly 2-3 times that – if you can find it.

The 5.7 is touted as more of a law enforcement round, due to its ability to penetrate body armor, but I don't need that, (though likely still possible) for my quarry is more into speed and stealth than body armor. I was able to test the TCM on some 2" hardened steel, and can safely say if I see a varmint behind that much steel, he's pretty safe anyway.

Shooting impressions and accuracy: If you love a buttery smooth trigger and almost no recoil, with a pistol that probably already fits in a holster you already own, you're going to like this gun! The gun functioned flawlessly through the first couple hundred rounds without a single malfunction. Accuracy is excellent, and if you get a chance to shoot it in the evening, the 4 foot flame that comes out the barrel is quite impressive. And all with almost no recoil! I've taken two coyotes with this round so far, and have to say, within typical pistol ranges, this thing really packs a punch!

Long Term: I have to say this pistol is not likely to go anywhere soon and has a permanent place with my hunting gear. With the available ammo, and now the reloading components being more readily available from Armscor, this heavy hitting, fire breathing dragon is a keeper!
