

Thank You Notes

David,
What I learned from Career Solutions:

I've worked for my company now for a 1.5 yrs. The manager who hired me stopped by my desk and said "I want to show you something." Then he handed me a thank you card and asked me to look at it. To my surprise, it was the thank you card I gave him just a little over 1.5 years ago. He said he's had this card ever since the day he received it after my interview.

He continued to say, that when they were hiring for the position that I now fill that I was among the top 3-4 candidates being considered for the job. He and the director struggled over which candidate would be the best to fill the position. He admitted he was having a hard time deciding because all 4 candidates had the qualifications, skills, personality and any could easily fit into the role. But the decision became easy within a couple of days when he received my thank you note. It was the deciding factor.

He added, after hiring and managing for many years, only one candidate has ever sent him a thank you note, and that candidate was me. He keeps it in his drawer. Thank you, Dave. You helped make the difference for me and others like me. Keep up the great work.
