The humane way to control feral cat populations

Statistics indicate there are over 480 million street cats worldwide. These animals face many challenges, including the need for food, shelter, and medical care.

Without intervention, their number can increase exponentially, leading to overpopulation, diseases, and a strain on local ecosystems. This is where TNR comes into play and here's how it works:

Trap

Stray cats are caught using humane traps and then transported to a clinic/neuter facility for care, ensuring their comfort and safety throughout the process.

Neuter

Each cat undergoes a health check before neutering, which is followed by ear tipping.

Release

After surgery and recovery, the cats are returned to their original location with ongoing care and colony management provided by caretakers.

GET INVOLVED!

Help make a difference in the lives of strays in your community.

Volunteer

Become part of a TNR team and help trap, transport, and care for strays. You can also volunteer by helping build feeding stations for stray cats in your area, or become a travel buddy to help cats get to their forever home destination.

Educate

Help spread the word! Inform your community about the problems of animal homelessness and the benefits of TNR and responsible pet ownership.

Donate

Consider offering financial assistance if you are unable to volunteer. Your contributions can fund veterinary care, traps, food and even educational materials.

Adopt/Foster

Consider giving a forever or even temporary home to an animal in need. Adopting/fostering from shelters helps ease their burden and free up space to take in more animals in need.
