

Fernando and his Mother, both undocumented immigrants, have never stayed in one place for too long. Running across the border was his first memory as a child.

Returning to Mexico at the age of seven, only reinforced that he and his Mother had no roots. Later at the age of seventeen, Fernando's Mother forces him to leave Mexico once more to make a fresh start in the US. Working odd jobs and fearing deportation, they spend their lives running. But, when Fernando's Mother suffers a heart attack on their way to work, he is left to run again. This time on his own.
