

The DARK SOUL
MANIFESTO
Melusine Story

Do you remember who you were, before you said the Word that gave rise to Light?

Today, some of us are that same being. We are living shrines who carry that memory in the dark part of our soul.

The Nature of Darkness

Darkness is not empty; the Void is not dead space. It is the first intelligence that existed before the light, and eventually reabsorbs it. In Jewish Kabbalah, they call it the Ain. In Daoist texts, it is the “dark womb” of the Dao. In modern physics, it is called dark energy — unknown in substance, yet governing all. Darkness is not sinister, but scientific. It cloaks all invisible electromagnetic energy. It represents around 95% of the Universe. The energy and matter known to humans is a tiny fraction of all that is. The rest is darkness.

The nature of darkness is not moralistic, but mystical. It is the source of all things material and immaterial. It manifests in the physical world as melanin and black pigment. It is expressed in the nonphysical world as primordial chaos and the sentient cosmos. Consider this: “chaos” is not random, or even disordered. On the contrary, it can be understood as negentropy: a process that maintains order by exporting entropy, creating information instead of noise.

The Nature of Light & Light Elementals

This intelligent darkness predates the light and maintains its own order for all of infinity. Thus, the light that was birthed from darkness is finite. Everything “under the Sun” is entropic: the longer it exists, the more it falls into disorder and random noise. This is the natural “order” of death and decay.

The nature of light is deceptive. It only reveals a sliver of truth, like the 5% of the known Universe. To only accept what is visible or tangible stagnates mortals and passively leads to their undoing.

A Light Elemental is opposite to a Dark Soul. Their spirits are akin to shimmering pixies. They are designed to use the Light to create the ultimate medieval-esque fairytale, even if they play the part of Troll Under the Bridge. Either way, the Dark Soul knows that fairytales are unattainable. It is not because they are not real, but because they are not new. There is “nothing new under the Sun”, and yet the only true constant is change. True change comes about by dark, primeval chaos, not medieval magic. The kind of dark chaos that creates true change is ingrained in the living Dark Soul. They do not play make-believe, because they make realities.

What Is A Dark Soul?

A Dark Soul is a soul who has descended from the black heaven of primordial chaos millions of years ago. They have reincarnated as countless different life forms, up to and including humans. With each lifetime, experiential memory gets collected in their DNA. Like spiritual scars or tattoos, these memories are dense, primal expressions of darkness. If biologically, melanosis is “excess production of melanin in the skin or tissues”, then spiritually, Dark Soul memory is infinite accumulation of universal experience.

This is not a conscious phenomenon— one rarely activates such memory by reminiscing on childhood or reliving the past. Rather, this memory evolves through unconscious instincts and keen sensitivities from ancient traumas and early ecstatic revelations. Such experiences have crystallized into the body and hover in the Dark Soul’s subconscious mind. This is how some people seem to know things “without knowing”. It is because they know a Hell of a lot more than what they have consciously learned.

When the Dark Soul incarnates into a human nowadays, they lose much of this memory. This is because the entropic forces of the modern epoch now govern the world. Entropy erases the dark “marks” of primordial intelligence through the “veil of forgetfulness”. But even still, they have retained enough darkness to reawaken their all-encompassing power.

Damned Superhumans

A Dark Soul is already superhuman. They are negentropic “chaos agents”. They receive false light from the world and transmute it from mere noise into useful information. This internal system is automatic and self-regenerative. Unfortunately, such a superpower can turn on itself. The Light Elementals’ belief in fairytales may be delusional, but the Dark Souls’ mysterious alchemy is damning.

As a kid, did you ever take a hand of your peers and strike it against their own face, to and fro? If so, you may have mocked them to “stop hitting yourself, stop hitting yourself!” In this way you would be acting as a Light Elemental, creating “lighthearted” mischief for fun. In response, some may have expressed irritation toward you. Others may have even embraced the role as sensational puppet. But you and everyone else clearly knew that it was all in jest. Everyone except the Dark Soul child, who may have subconsciously felt such an act as another reminder that they are the unlucky chosen.

This is because the Dark Soul child may have fully believed that they were hitting themselves. At least, they may have believed they possessed you to want to hit them in the first place. It did not matter that neither the intent of the hit nor the impact were “real”. A young Dark Soul instinctively knows the ways of the Underworld. They “know without knowing” that there is always something real bubbling forth beneath the surface.

They also tend to see themselves as the cause of events. All too often this renders them afraid of their own power. It is clearly causing them to be targeted, regardless of how. With this subconscious wisdom, they ask a simple pair of questions: “Why me? What did I do?” Though they usually wonder in silence, no one can adequately answer this question for them. And the truth is, they have done nothing but simply exist. Their very presence oozes magnetic attraction, for better or for worse.

The Dark Descent

No one can teach a Dark Soul how to use their power to achieve success in this world, let alone how to regenerate it into the afterlife and the worlds beyond. Unlike for the mortal Light Elemental, physical achievement is not a ladder that Dark Souls must learn to climb. Spiritual enlightenment is not a stairway they must ascend. There is no master to look up to, like a giant image of Love and Light.

Dark Souls are the original Giants. And they are made to shrink themselves into a world that tries to chop their greatness at its ankles. The collective hope is that they will collapse into the Earth and quietly (or perhaps spectacularly) dissolve into the soil.

But “beneath” that soil lies the Underworld, which they know very well. They know that it is the same portal to the dark primordial heavens, from which the Dark Soul came. This means that the Dark Descent can lead to infinite awareness— a consciousness that keeps going, past the highest levels of “spiritual ascension”. They do not need to come down to Earth, to return home in their psyche.

There are 3 phases of Initiation through the Dark Descent:

1. Remembering: shaking off the cobwebs of institutional amnesia, willing sensation in the throws of spiritual “sleep paralysis”.
2. Power Harnessing: grasping, wielding and recreating that power with awakening intention to become permanently lucid.
3. Web weaving: weaving their own dark web of reality with flaming awareness, self-regenerating fuel, and “muscle memory” of the undying soul.

The goal is not to lower yourself to a world which revolves around the Sun of man. And the mission is not to descend into hell to ignite or rekindle trauma. The point is to go within yourself— not simply to “know who you are”, but rather to know the invisible spaces between the structures of who you are not. You do not go down, you just go dark.

Dark Soul Archetypes

A dark archetypal framework is a powerful way to keep a Dark Soul focused during the Dark Descent. Merging with a cohesive archetype allows us to make power plays without overturning the gameboard. It turns every achievement into an echo of deific apotheosis.

There are three basic subtypes of Dark Soul:

1. The Black Widow: A receptive, feminine essence, often nestled in the domestic customer service, or even sex-working spheres. These are housewives and househusbands, secretaries, and strippers. Here, the Dark Soul learns of the secret of infernal subservience to dominate their realm and weave their desired reality.
2. The Demon: an ambitious, masculine essence, often trailblazing through lucrative fields. These are entrepreneurs, visionary leaders, investors, and founders. They learn to supercharge their sovereignty by dissolving all social conditions masquerading as “morally sound” while undermining their greatest potential.
3. The Vampire: a complex, gender-neutral essence, usually found in academic fields, the justice system, or “underground”. They’re your psychologists, lawyers, occultists, artists, or really anyone at all. They learn the science of psychic energy exchange, the craft of astral energy devouring, and the art of charismatic self-preservation in the social scene.

All of these archetypes are variations of the same “undead”, predatory, primeval intelligence, demonstrated by the overarching entity of the Dark Soul. Without such tropes, they often demonize themselves, weaponize their abilities, or worse— simply try to ignore what they know at their core. Society is already designed to do all of this.

How Society Subdues the Dark Soul

Society hides from the Dark Soul their own hidden knowledge. These are the knowings that:

1. Their power lies in their rich bank of memory
2. Their memory makes them immortal
3. They cannot be annihilated by any force except their own
4. Their power has been stolen by Light Elementals. But it continues to backfire, and this makes them afraid.
5. The modern global paradigm is built from the fear of Darkness.

When Light Elementals can trick the Dark Souls into turning their own power against them, then the Dark Soul becomes blind, lives as a mortal and dies like men. Then, their divine “threat” is subdued for a while.

The Invitation

But if you are one of us, you still feel the gravitational pull of your potency, which stirs a primal knowing within. For those ready to go deeper, I open the gates to dark mental al-khemy for visionaries, strategists and sovereigns who seek to refine mythic frameworks for wealth, legacy, and immortal dominion. Join us if you dare to come home to your kingdom and reign, with all the lights out.

THE GATES

ARE OPEN.