

Hello Meet Kara Linaburg

A Study in Terminal

YA Social Issues, Suicide, Hope, Healing
6.7.22

Queen of awkward and writer before she could properly spell, Kara Linaburg is passionate about creating stories with beauty in brokenness. When she's not playing the role of author or editor, she's planning her next adventure or watching the sunset. Kara lives in the mountains of West Virginia, the setting of "A Study In Terminal." You can find her on www.thebeautifullybrokenblog.com or on social media @kara_lynn_author where making new friends is basically her hobby.

#Booksthatmatter

Monarch Educational Services, LLC
www.monarcheducationalservices.com
<https://linktr.ee/karalynnauthor>

What Reviewers Are Saying ...

"Linaburg delivers an impressive novel with a beautifully layered storyline that slowly and cohesively brings together wildly different aspects of the main character's life. A confidently told story that deftly confronts difficult realities with a feeling of authenticity. finely tuned and realistic novel about making peace with the past."

Kirkus Reviews

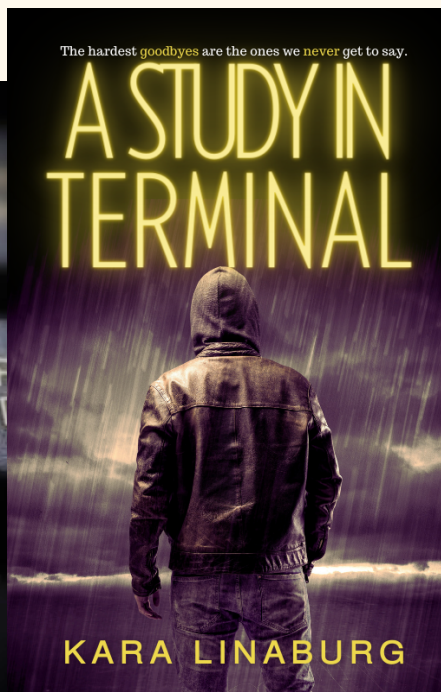

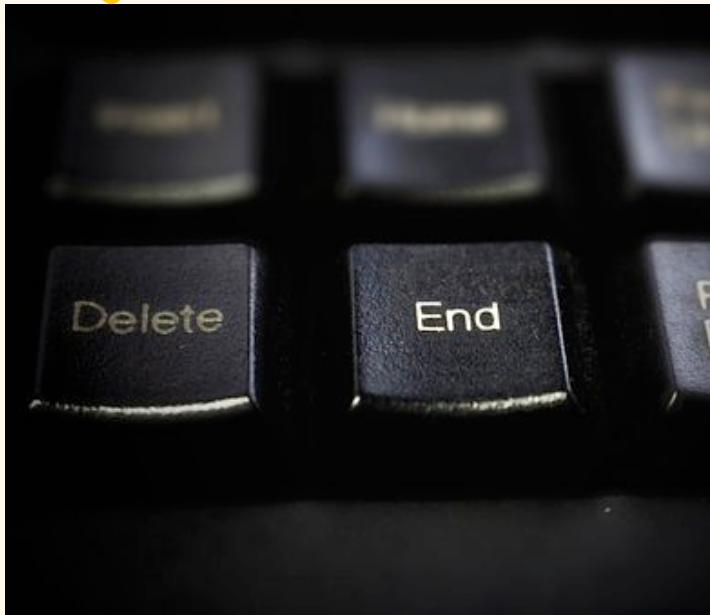

"A Study in Terminal is filled with profound insights into the human condition. While exploring the depths of despair, it provides hope for reconciliation. It is an outstanding novel and highly recommended."

5 STARS - Reader's Favorite

"Poignant and visceral, A Study in Terminal takes the reader on a deep dive into the heart of death, what it means, and how we each may become uniquely acquainted with it. With care and precision, Linaburg has crafted a story that will arrest your attention from its beginning all the way through to its soaring conclusion."

5 STARS - Brian McBride - Award Winning Novelist

Book Blurbs

www.books2read.com/ASIT

Paperback ISBN: 978-1-7376738-3-5

Ebook ISBN: 978-1-7376738-4-2

Hardcover ISBN: 978-1-7376738-5-9

Pages: 180

Word Count: 51,000

Audience: YA; Ages 13 - up;

Grades: 9-12

Categories: Death, loss, and bereavement; suicide; mental health; social issues - family; thriller; clean read

Press: Monarch Educational Services, LLC

Release Date: June 7, 2022

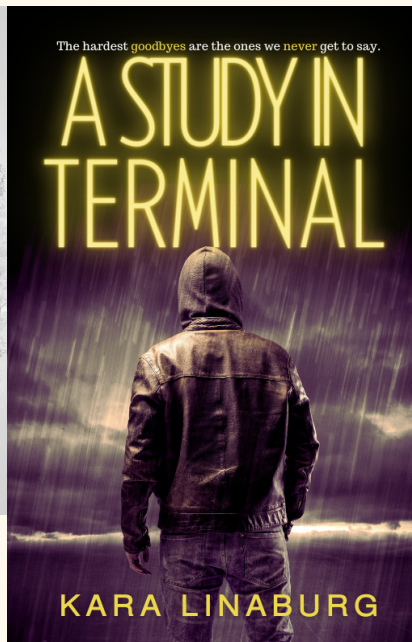

Sean Brogan has spent most of his life running from a past he can never escape. Emotionally abandoned by his alcoholic father and secretly blaming himself for his mother's death, the scars he carries are ones no one can see. On the anniversary of the day that changed his life forever, Sean flees New York City on his 1965 Triumph Bonneville, hoping to face the demons that plague his nightmares.

He plans to slip into the sleepy town of Lake Fort, West Virginia as quietly as he did ten years before, but his life has never gone as planned. Sean never expects to see Rina, the blue-haired sister of his childhood best friend who makes it her mission to rescue the lost things. A hopeful dreamer who sits on the roof and watches the sunset, she represents all the things that he has lost. As Sean spends time in the lakeside town that has haunted his dreams since he was a little boy, he has no choice but to face the pain that he buried from a life cut off too soon. In the blink of an eye, with a gun to his head, Sean is forced to confront what it means to fight for the will to live when your world has gone dark.

An anthem for those of us who have been left behind, A Study in Terminal is a vulnerable story about the human condition that reminds us that to beat your past, you first must turn around and face it.

Content: Parent death by suicide; suicidal thoughts; crime; gang violence; gun violence; substance abuse

#Booksthatmatter

Kara Linaburg, Author
Editor, Speaker

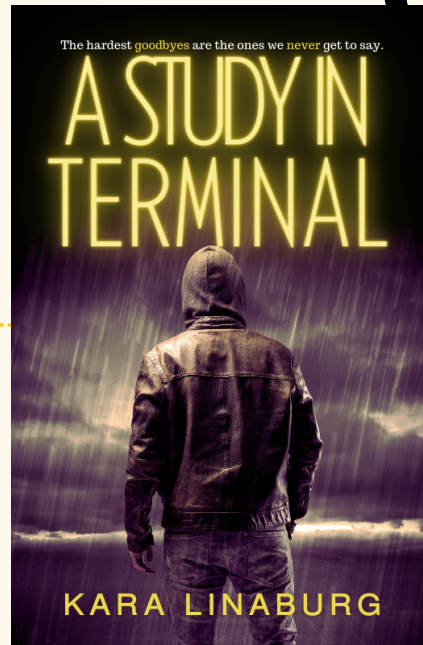

Kara Linaburg has had a passion for stories for as long as she can remember -- especially ones that show us light in the darkness. Currently enrolled as a student in UCLA-Extension's program for editing and publishing, she is a freelance editor and author in her spare time. She loves having conversations about mental health, healing, writing, and finding beauty in the broken.
www.thebeautifullybrokenblog.com

Dynamic Relatable
Honest
Caring

Available for High School, Library, Church, and Organization Visits!

Contact Kara Linaburg today at boundbyhope13@gmail.com to book Kara for your next event!

Kara Linaburg is available for virtual and onsite speaking events!