

Editor's Aim | Winter and New Beginnings | Winter/Spring 2023

---

TRACE

One thing is certain is the themes of the past writing exercise led to new discoveries. Let the writing take care of itself. Step back and see what works with the least effort. No matter what we carry out in our daily lives, the creative process finds a way to shore up.

During your self-directed residency, keep the focus on what you find as your source.

When faced with a new thought try adding a different approach to how you make the next creation stick. Then try changing it to see what works best. Review what changed from the first draft to the next or the previous versions of your past. Consider the feelings and the sense experience that traveling up and down a mountain offers the creative process. Also write of the time you travelled to the well of the mountain.

Onward,

Artist/Author/Creative Director/Curator

Imani Maryahm Harrington