Autism Center for Children Expands Practice

Center Enhances Autism Treatment Capabilities for More Toddlers and Children from New Larger Office

Woodstock, GA – August 3, 2016 – Autism Center for Children, a practice advancing early diagnosis and treatment of autism in toddlers and children, today announced the latest expansion of its services, team and facilities. Amanda Bissonnette-Brown has joined the practice and will help oversee the treatment portion of the Center’s services. Bissonnette-Brown has a Master’s of Education in Multiple and Severe Disabilities with an emphasis in Autism and has experience as a behavior therapist and lead autism teacher. In addition, the Center has moved into a new larger office, doubling the size of its previous location.

“We are very proud to add Amanda to our expanding team,” declares Dr. Julie Crittendon, head of the Autism Center for Children. “It is our mission to provide identification and treatment of autism that delivers the most immediate, profound and lasting improvement in the quality of life for our clients. This addition, plus our move into our larger office, enables us to better respond to the increasing demand for our services from families all over Atlanta and North Georgia.”

Bissonnette-Brown received her Master’s from Georgia State University, and her teaching experience includes serving as a Behavior Therapist and Lead PBIS Teacher at the Georgia Network for Educational and Therapeutic Services (GNETS) and as an Instructional Paraprofessional at the Fulton County School System.

The Autism Center for Children has moved its main office to 226 Creekstone Ridge in Woodstock, GA 30188. This larger office will enable the Center to better serve its increasing demand in both its diagnostic and treatment services, while providing the same easy access just off I-575 North at Exit 7 (Highway 92). For visitors from out of town, the office is conveniently located within a mile of several hotel and numerous dining options.
