Hi Howard,

Retirement is so passe. More and more retirees are beginning to question what they want to do with their “post-working” lives. Can a game of golf or bridge really keep what Hercule Poirot used to call the “little grey cells” sufficiently active? What sort of legacy do you want to leave behind? How can you enjoy those things which are most important, in what might be a full third of your lifetime? Are we not - in the first and final analysis - created to be workers?

Slowing down somewhat is a normal part of the aging process. Each week, we are used to being active six days and resting on the seventh. Each year, we look forward to our annual vacations. And in each of our lives we look forward to retirement. But we can't just stop "cold turkey" because that's not good for body, mind or spirit. Therefore, as part of my Estate Planning, I discuss how at some level my clients can continue to work, but in a way that reduces the anxiety level. You get to be picky about your work and can even choose, if you can afford it, to work at charitable causes, but continue to work as we were intended to.
