Singing Japan's Heart, Sharing It's Music.

THE STORY

Most people outside Japan discover its culture through anime, J-pop or modern entertainment. For British performers LJ English and Okusama, it was the timeless songs of the Showa era that captured their hearts.

The duo have spent years learning, performing and celebrating these much-loved classics, singing entirely in Japanese for audiences around the world.

Their performances are born not from novelty, but from a genuine admiration for the artists, songwriters and musical traditions that shaped one of Japan's most treasured eras.

Now they are returning to Japan for the third time to share that passion with the audiences who know and love these songs best
