Introduction:

This section reveals and discusses my findings from conducting my applied research study on child custody awarding’s in the State of Iowa. Specifically I conducted my study in Greene, Clinton, and Polk Counties which consisted of a total of 780 cases from January of 2011 through the first week of November 2011 filed under Iowa Code 598 Dissolution of Marriage. The cases were reviewed and documented to determine if Joint Physical Care, mom, or dad was awarded as the primary care arrangement in the final ruling and whether the order was decreed or stipulated.

Analysis:

The information gathered from Clinton, Greene, and Polk Counties suggests that when a judge issues a decreed ruling, mom will be granted primary physical placement 73%, dad will be awarded primary physical placement 8%, and JPC will be awarded 19% of the time. Looking at this data from another perspective, the data shows that upon an application for divorce, the courts only consider 27% of all divorcing fathers fit for raising their children in contested cases. These judicial awards appear to contradict the “best interest of the child” standard as defined by Iowa Code 598.1(1) and suggests judicial bias along with the need for family law reform.
