

Chronic Wasting Disease Surveillance

Help monitor the health of our wildlife populations

Chronic wasting disease (CWD) is a fatal disease that affects the central nervous system of deer, elk, moose and caribou. There is no cure or prevention for the disease.

The disease is caused by infectious proteins, called prions. These infectious proteins accumulate in the nervous tissue of the animal, causing microscopic holes in the brain. Animals appear healthy in the early stages of the disease. CWD is invariably fatal and expected to have negative impacts on deer and elk populations throughout North America.

The disease can be transmitted directly from one animal to another through saliva, feces or urine, or contaminated soil and water.

Priority surveillance zones for 2018

Any cervid (i.e. deer, elk or moose) harvested in Saskatchewan can be tested free of charge for CWD. However, in an attempt to increase sample size in certain areas of the province, priority surveillance zones have been set for 2018. These include: WMZ 12, 13, 14E and 14W in the southwest; WMZ 15, 16, 31, 32 and 33 in the southeast; and WMZ 50, 63 and 64 in north-central Saskatchewan.

All hunters that harvest cervids in these zones are asked to submit samples for testing.

If you would like to submit a head for CWD testing during the 2018 hunting season, please ensure you acquire a unique CWD tracking number, using the new Canadian Wildlife Health Cooperative/Government of Saskatchewan submission (www.cwdsk.ca).

Chronic Wasting Disease Testing

Saskatchewan hunters can have their harvested animals tested for chronic wasting disease, free of charge.

For more information on how to submit a sample for testing, contact your local Ministry of Environment office or visit saskatchewan.ca/cwd.
