

Theater

Theater was developed to honor their gods. Three of the genres used in Greek entertainment were comedy, satire plays, and most importantly tragedy.

Comedy was developed to mock men in power.

Satire plays were performed to make fun of the tragedies they faced in every day life.

Tragedy was another form of entertainment that dealt with love, loss, and abuse.

Took their entertainment very seriously and used drama as a way of investigating the area around them and what it meant to be human.

Menander, a Greek director, developed comedies to relate to the common people, in sit coms. Which is still a major form of comedy in our world today.
