Unconditional definitely has a good message to it. Inspired by the true story of Joe Bradford of Nashville, TN, it weaves together the lives of three people specifically that will in the end all find the answers that they're searching for. A powerful story of forgiveness, love and benevolence to the disenfranchised, it challenges us to look beyond ourselves and to those around us. Being a Christian movie, it would have been nicer to see the expressions of faith in Jesus Christ, and the use of His name that are alluded to but not named and the reading of the Bible that has brought life and hope to their lives. Now a day a person could put in the name any 'god' and identify it with their religious views and thus obscuring the message of Christianity. We can't be afraid to lift up and speak the name of Jesus Christ.
