The Anatolian Shepherd Dog is a breed of dog that originated in the Anatolia region of central Turkey. It is rugged, large, and very strong, with good sight and hearing that allows it to protect livestock. With its high speed and agility, it is able to run down a predator with great efficiency. It was imported as a guard dog for livestock, people, and property. It is very intelligent and an independent thinker. It requires minimal discipline but may need to be occasionally corrected as a puppy. It learns quickly. The Anatolian Shepherd was developed to be independent and forceful, responsible for guarding its master's flocks without human assistance or direction. Owners of dogs of this breed must socialize the dogs as puppies to turn them into appropriate companions. The Anatolian Shepherd Dog is very loyal and can be fiercely possessive and protective of its family, stock, and territory. The Anatolian is also a bold, balanced, and confident dog that does not become overstimulated easily. This breed is extremely diverse and is now used for PTSD, ADA, guide dogs for the blind or impaired, and children with disabilities like Aspergers.

I have a couple people that are looking for specific traits in a dog, including a dog that is good with poultry. That being said, I will be assisting in some of the pickings of the puppies based on their personalities and natural gifts.
