

thrillist

8 Exciting Restaurant Openings To Try in NYC This Week

The Big Apple is now home to world famous spots like a celebrated Argentinian concept and a Parisian brasserie dating back to 1899.

By Izzy Baskette

Before we jet off on our upcoming holiday travels with the help of our handy JFK and LGA Airport Guides, we're making the most of our time in the city with everything from scoping out the top celeb-sighting spots according to DeuxMoi, to checking out the coolest immersive art exhibits across the boroughs.

And of course, New York City's newest eateries are on our itinerary as well. From the first Big Apple branch of a celebrated Argentinian concept to a limited-time pizza pop-up out of the kitchen of Jack & Charlie's no. 118 in the West Village, there's plenty to whip up an appetite. Here are 8 of the most exciting restaurant openings you can't miss in NYC this week.

Pastries at Mostrador | Photo courtesy of Mostrador

Mostrador

Tribeca

With locations already in Buenos Aires, Montauk, and London, the celebrated Argentinian chef, Fernando Trocca (Sucre in London, Orilla in Miami), now welcomes the first NYC location of Mostrador in Tribeca. At the new eatery, innovative takes on classic dishes are inspired by flavors and pastries from chef Trocco's upbringing in Buenos Aires. Currently open for breakfast and lunch, signature sweets include the Medialuna (brioche-based) and Alfajores (sandwich cookies filled with dulce de leche). On the rotating food program, expect offerings like Beetroots (grilled pears, avocado cream) and Chicken Braised in Stock & Beer. The wine selection spotlights lesser-known South American varietals, and dinner service is launching early next month.