WAHI PANA

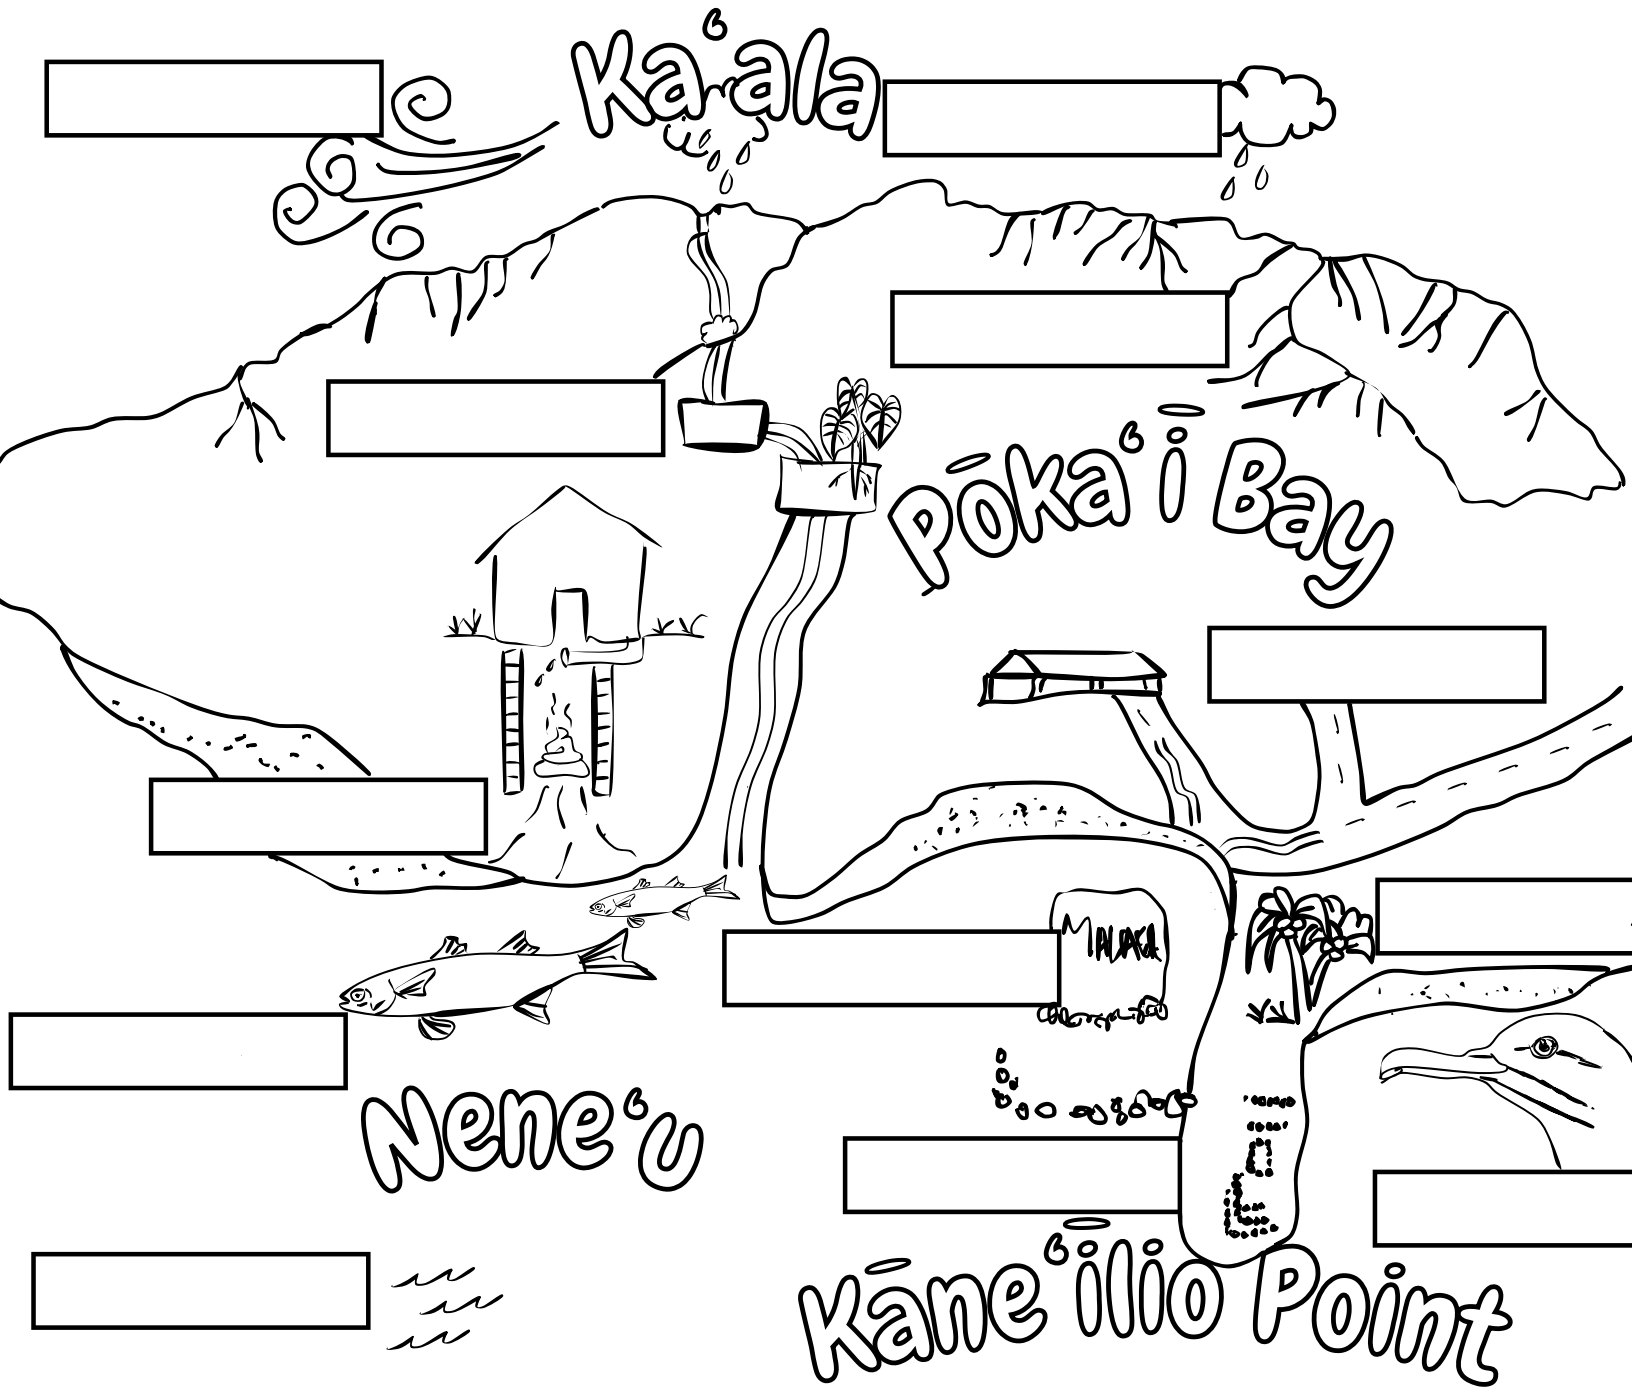

(legendary and storied living spaces)

Lā/Date:

This ki'i (picture) depicts an Ahupua'a, a land division that stretches from the uplands (Uka) to the sea (Kai). The Native Hawaiians valued water resources greatly, using streams for various purposes like bathing, irrigating kalo, and drinking. Nowadays, our community resides in a modified landscape with canals, cesspools, roads, and runoff from parking lots, all affecting water quality negatively. How do you embody your Kuleana (responsibility) to ensure the long-term sustainability and well-being of both the community and the land? Fill in the blanks below.
