

Emotional Processing

Ideal emotional processing happens when you name the emotion you are feeling and describe where and how in the body you feel it.

Beware the trap of telling the story of the emotion - the story reignites the emotion, perpetuating it rather than dispersing it.

The idea is to engage the observer in your brain, because the observer provides a safe island of calm where emotions can dissipate.

