

We see this in the great leaders, thinkers, and instances of history, but we also see it in everyday life.

- The teacher who inspires students, knowing the results may not be seen for years.
- The parent who nurtures a child, investing in their character and values.
- The artist who creates something enduring, leaving beauty for future generations.
- The entrepreneur who builds a company that provides jobs long after they are gone.

All of them are planting trees. All of them are living in a "We" world.

Why Are We Here?

The answer is not found in fleeting pleasures or personal successes alone. The elderly man in the story understood that his life was part of something greater, that he was connected to those who came before him and those who would come after. So he planted the tree.

And now, the question comes to us: Why are we here?

I think it can be only for one purpose:

To make this world better than we found it for the generations to come.
