

Teach your students to be team players.

This world needs better teamwork...

"Far too many leaders tackle their tasks as lone rangers, assuming they can reach their goals on their own...In this book, Jeff Mingee unpacks a better approach—teamwork— from a biblical perspective."

DR. CHUCK LAWLESS — Dean of Graduate Studies at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

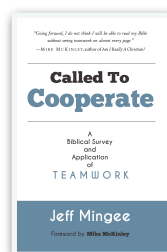

Christian education plays a unique and needed role in our society...but it takes a village to keep a school up-and-running. As an administrator, you're doing the important work of training-up young men and women. You're getting the curriculum just right. You're arranging the schedules for each grade level. You're training new staff members—and convincing existing ones to get on board with new ideas. And you're probably coordinating athletic programs as well....In the midst of all these ever-important, but challenging, tasks, I'm sure you wouldn't turn down some more help. After all, your school isn't just preparing students for success in the business world, but you are also equipping the next generation for their lifelong Christian journey. So, execution matters...and for that, you'll need a good team. I, for one, would love to contribute!

Jeff Mingee

So, what's the plan of attack? Well first, your students need smart, practical steps that they can start implementing immediately. They need exposure to team dynamics. They need easy tactics that can help them get things done as a group. But they also need to have a firm foundation of godliness underneath all of their work-related and academic skills. Now, I'll be honest...there are plenty of great resources on teamwork and the psychology behind it. On the other hand, there are amazing books that contain theological truths. But, when I first realized the need for one during my ministry work, there wasn't a resource that paired these two ideas together—so I wrote one. Called to Cooperate: A Biblical Survey and Application of Teamwork. I studied through the Scriptures and found teamwork on every page. Ever since then, I've been teaching its contents to leadership committees, church planters, and missionary groups. But now, I'm turning my attention to Christian schools...I'm reaching out to you because I started out in Youth Ministry, and it still holds a piece of my heart. So, it would be a thrill to come and teach these principles from my book to your students in your weekly chapel service.

To book Jeff for a speaking engagement, simply email jeffmingeewrites@gmail.com

If you would like to support Jeff's mission of facilitating God-honoring teamwork, you can buy a $10 copy of Called to Cooperate on Amazon or Barnes & Noble.