EVERYDAY SAVINGS ON ESSENTIAL ITEMS

TRANSFORMING TRENDS

The future of foodservice centers around advancing technology. “Connected” equipment utilizes Bluetooth and WiFi communication networks to self-diagnose and remotely send alerts to operators. Cloud-based, remote oven management systems also allow operators to have greater control over the consistency and execution of their menu. Advances in engineering have driven developers to create new space-saving solutions with multi-functioning equipment that make the most of every square inch. And with a trend towards open kitchens, manufacturers are taking greater care in how their equipment looks with aesthetically pleasing designs that take center stage.

Maintain Your Cool

Blast chillers are designed to bring food down from just-cooked temperatures to well below freezing in a short amount of time. If a unit's evaporator coils and condenser are dirty, they'll have to work harder to perform their jobs. This will drive up electricity usage, increase their cooling time (and hence labor costs) and ultimately shorten their useful life.

To learn more visit: fesmag.com

Keep an eye out for cracked or loose gaskets, as well as loose or damaged hinges, both of which can impact unit performance.

Follow the manufacturer's guidelines regarding the containers for food placed in a blast chiller. If not stored properly, the gases put out by acidic foods (primarily produce) can eat away at key refrigeration components over time.
