

NEUROFEEDBACK FOR HEALTH

CONFIDENTIALITY/MANDATED REPORTER STATEMENT

NEUROFEEDBACK FOR HEALTH, in offering EEG biofeedback, as well as other clinical services, understands the confidential nature of client information. Information shared during the course of treatment is designed to be confidential. It is important to understand the limits and definitions of confidential material.

Information shared with NEUROFEEDBACK FOR HEALTH becomes a part of the treatment file. Review of pertinent treatment material occurs on a regular basis with treatment team.

Although treatment is designed to be confidential, some practitioners of NEUROFEEDBACK FOR HEALTH are licensed healthcare providers, who by nature of their license have specific criteria for when confidentiality can and must be breached.

Confidential information can be released by NEUROFEEDBACK FOR HEALTH only when there is a written release from the client, but there are the following exceptions:

Personnel are mandated reporters for a reasonable suspicion of child, dependent or elder abuse. If such a suspicion arises, they are mandated to report it to the authorities. Confidentiality can and must be breached when clients present a danger to themselves or others (suicide or homicidal ideation). While it is their legal responsibility to report, it is also their ethical responsibility to help negotiate such a crisis. Intent to destroy property may also be cause for breaching confidentiality. When treatment records are under a court subpoena, records and confidential communications can also be breached.

I hereby consent to treatment under the terms and limitations as described in this document.
