This Italianate style brick home was built in the 1860's by the Caleb Brown family. There is a fine carriage house in the rear. It was later owned by John Rhoades (who grew tobacco on land that is now part of the Elementary School playground) and then Mr. and Mrs. Fred Woodruff. For a short time, Mrs. Woodruff had a small gift shop in the front part of the house. It is now owned (since 1975) and being restored by Mrs. Patricia Conroy.

The A. D. Rhoades house, circa 1840, is of simplistic Greek Revival style. When the front portion of the home was remodeled in 1991-92, it was evident that the back portion had once been another building, one which had been moved to the site or had been so close that it could be joined by siding over the space between them. In the 1930's the home was owned by John Barber and his family. It later became the home of Josephine and Arthur Rogers, who were succeeded by Carlene and Roy Schoener. The owner, since 1981, has been Judy Conroy Hallinan.

The E. H. Garrison home, circa 1865, is vernacular with some Italianate features. There is a painted glass window in the peak. The home was owned by Frank Cronk and his family in the 1930's and 1940's. It was purchased by Gary Place in 1996 from Donald Cronk, who had inherited it from his mother.

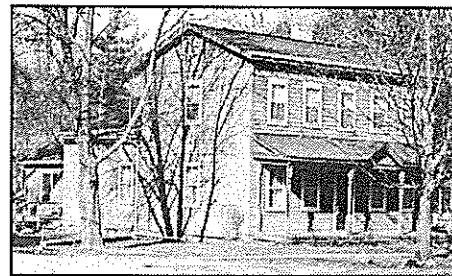

The first lawyer in Elbridge was Gideon Willcoxon (Wilcoxon), arriving in 1813.

An Italianate home probably built in the 1860's either by or for P. VanVechten. There is a large addition attached to the rear. The cupola has been removed.

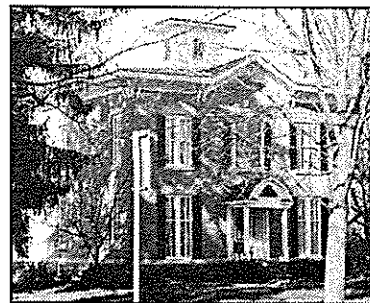

There have also been many changes made on the first floor's interior. The home has had the following owners: Milo Clark (1920's+), Ansel Simonds (1947-1950's) and Dr. and Mrs. Robert Gregg of Syracuse. It is presently the home of Gale and Marcelline Mitchell.

The home of Mary Pat and Thomas Ganley since 1989, it may not be the original dwelling on this site. The corner structure, probably built by (or for) C. H. VanVechten before 1856, is shown on early maps as having been a tavern, possibly the one whose ballroom was used by the first-term students of Nathan Munro's newly founded Munro Academy of 1835, while its 1836 frame building (now gone) was being erected at 107 East Main Street. The builder and date of the present house, if not the original, are unknown. It served as a parsonage for the Baptist Society ministers until 1949, and sold to Leva and Allen Cone in 1950. The Cones sold to the Sakellariadis in 1988. (Note the "casket door" on the east side of the house.)

This Italianate brick home, built by J. Rice in the 1860's, is not the first structure on the site. The original was a hotel owned by a Mrs. Burgess, later by U. V. Cook. The original building was moved northward on the property, where it then became the home of Cecilia and John Sherman; it was razed by the fire department in March 1966. It has been hinted that the brick home may have been a station on the underground railroad. For a short time it was painted white. There is a two-story, wood addition attached to the rear. The house was previously owned by Delia Rhoads Orser who inherited it from her mother; Mrs. Orser sold the house to Helen and Floyd Godfrey. It is now the property of Linda and Fred Weisskopf. They have done much to restore it, including removing the paint from the bricks and, in 1997, rebuilding the cupola.
