Pictures freeze a moment of time. They remind us of an event. Or they remind us of a particular feeling. Most of the time we take pictures of events, places, or people we want to remember. We hardly ever take pictures when bad things happen. "Johnny, hold up your report card! We want to remember today when you failed three classes!" No parent does that! Looking back at old pictures can be a fun thing. It can bring back memories of great times! Who doesn't want to see childhood pictures when you received that special Christmas present!?! The problem with looking back too much is you can lose focus on the present. You can long for the days gone by and miss out on the great things happening right now!

Enjoy the pictures from the past but don't stop living in the present. Make plans for the future, but don't daydream too much about days to come that you regret what you missed today.
