BEST ANSWERS FOR THE "#1 KNOCKOUT QUESTION" INTERVIEWERS WILL ASK

In many cases, the purpose of many interviews is not to find out which candidates employers want to hire, but a process by which interviewers eliminate those they do not want to hire.

Simply said, if you answer an interviewer's questions incorrectly or they are not the answers they are looking for, you could leave yourself vulnerable to be among those who are eliminated, and you obviously do not want that to happen.

One of the deadliest questions any interviewer can ask has the potential to eliminate you as a candidate and is what I call the "knock-out" question.

In my hiring experience, many candidates have answered this question incorrectly and got knocked out of the competition.

Here is the question. "Could you tell me about your weaknesses?" or more simply, "What are your weaknesses?"

We all have weaknesses.

But if you answer this question incorrectly and go on to say that you don't like authority, the last position you worked at didn't get along with other employees, or that you are usually late or you have other issues, you will most likely be eliminated as a potential candidate.

Well, you get the idea.

No answer like those will get you hired.

No one wants to hear or manage someone who has an exhaustive list of "weaknesses" or other potentially negative issues.

Bringing your excessive baggage along with you will pretty much knock you out of the running even before a potential employer considers all the other great skills you have.

Here is the perfect answer to ensure that you do not get eliminated from being hired when or if you are asked this dealbreaker of a question, "What are your weaknesses?"

The perfect answer? "Sometimes I get impatient."

In my opinion, that is the perfect answer and the only answer that will not cause you to get knocked out of the running.

Why?

Because we all get impatient for some reason at some time.

Your interviewer will most likely be able to relate to your answer because they were impatient for some reason at some time too.

There is no perfect answer.

But believe me, your interviewer has the slimmest chance of eliminating you because of that answer.

Say anything else other than what I just told you and you are in danger of being dismissed from the hiring list.

Employers do not want you to bring lots of baggage with you.

You could be the most highly qualified candidate with all kinds of attributes and skills you could bring to the job and still employers are likely to perceive your weaknesses as being negative.

Saying anything about your weaknesses other than you sometimes get impatient can easily open up an interviewer's mind to anything and you don't want them to go there.

If I could give you two pieces of advice for getting inside your interviewer's head to describe who he or she wanted to hire and properly answering one of the deadliest knock-out questions ever, it would be the last thing.

Remember to write this one critical question and this one acceptable answer down so you do not forget it in your interview
