Property Maintenance Affidavit

On behalf of the community which you seek to purchase or transfer real estate, you may be asked for an affidavit to be signed and notarized to attach to the application. Whenever a property, structure or occupied area may have violations of the property maintenance code, jurisdictional ordinances or perhaps the fire code, it may not be possible to abate all the known or unknown violations prior to a real estate closing date and time.

What is the Affidavit for?

The affidavit is a legal form which requires the “buyer” of a perspective new structure to sign before a Pennsylvania Notary Public for the protection of community of violations which may exist or be present during a real estate transfer.

Why is a PA Notary Required?

This is also a legal protection that provides the community an understanding of who is signing for the violations. The violations will transfer to the new buyer upon the real estate transfer, so having the proper legal person sign in front of a notary is best.

Can I still close on my property with violations?

In most circumstances, yes. The final decision is up to the Building Code Official or the Code Enforcement Officer (Property Maintenance), but most communities will allow a transfer to take place if the “buyer” assumes responsibility and complies with the violations upon purchase.

How much time do I have after the affidavit?

Once the transfer has taken place, the new “buyer” should present plans to the building department to rectify the violations and move toward a full occupancy or use certificate. Most conditional permits for transfer are valid for up to six months, but extended time may be granted if progress of code compliance are being made.

Do I need a Building permit?

Check with the local Building Code Official, depending on the level of alterations, you may not need a permit. The BCO will help interpret this with you.

Can I live in the building without an occupancy? (Including rent to someone?)

NO. It is never safe or assumed by the local community to be legal to occupy a structure of dwelling without a valid certificate of occupancy or valid use certificate.
