Big Changes

Monday: No school

Tuesday: We helped our 2nd grade friends move into their permanent classroom. Nevertheless, we had a great time hosting our them during the first week of school. We started working on our multiplication skills and found that multiplying is just an another way of adding.

Wednesday: We set our schedule for our classroom and didn't waste a minute for learning. We began to learn what a personal narratives is and wrote our very own story, from beginning to middle to end.

Thursday: In science class we had a chance to learn more about garter snakes. We learned that garter snakes shed their skin in order to allow their skin to grow and become stronger. They also hibernate in the winter to survive.

Friday: We continued to strengthen our writing skills with proofreading and editing our personal narrative.

WHAT'S NEXT..... next week in math, we'll continue to learn new strategies for multiplication. We will also being reading our first novel.
