What We Learned

Reading & Language Arts

We will begin our next story called My Brother Martin. This story is about civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. We will focus on concepts like reader's purpose and the genre biographies. I'll introduce the students to a type of figurative language called idioms. For language arts we will learn about different types of sentences including declarative, interrogative, imperative and exclamatory.

Mathematics

We will continue on to our next lesson which is comparing numbers. We will use proper signage to compare multi-digit numbers. Students who struggled with our last lesson will be required to do some review material one on one in order to ensure complete comprehension.

Science/ Social Studies

Both science and social studies were condensed this week due to iready testing. Therefore, we will continue last week's lessons and build upon them. For social studies we will dwell further into exploring the regions of the USA. For science we will learn more about motion. (Please note science maybe adjusted due to curriculum revisions.)
