Course objectives

Students will develop an:

1. in-depth knowledge of sub-state conflicts as well as the theories, concepts and sociopolitical issues that are associated with these movements.
2. ability to think critically about minority politics and deliberate on the sociopolitical factors (economic, cultural, institutional, etc.) that influence minorities' intergroup attitudes and their attachment to their country.
3. ability to synthesize important concepts and debates.
4. ability to formulate well-organized arguments, supported by scholarly evidence.

Course content

Intrastate conflicts have been prominent in the news recently, with the referendums in Scotland, Kurdistan and Catalonia as well as the violence in Hong Kong, Cameroon and West Papua being well-known examples. Such movements highlight tensions with majority groups and with the central governments. Yet, these movements have been forced to evolve due to increasing globalization, greater interconnections in international relations, and growing cultural diversity.

The course will present theories and concepts from comparative politics and conflict studies as a way of understanding and interpreting past and current events with regard to sub-state conflicts.

Issues of sub-state conflicts go beyond secessionism; they also touch upon questions of governance, values, and diversity. Minority politics have become an increasingly salient ‘challenge’ to the traditional nation-state. Additionally, the increasing diversity in Western societies caused by migration also underscores cultural and economic concerns that national minorities must deal with. As a result, the course will delve into the following questions:

- What is “sub-state” nationalism and how is it different from other forms of nationalism?
- How do movements for minority rights get started?
- How does the existing political process respond to or represent these voices?
- How are sub-state nationalist movements similar/different from each other?
- How do sub-state nationalist movements react to immigration?
- How can neighbouring countries and/or kin groups in foreign countries sway minorities’ relationship with their central government?
- How can the economic and political integration of countries (for example, through the European Union) influence intra-state tensions?
- Do economic crises have a positive or negative impact on secessionist movements?
- Can decentralization (for example, federalism) help address the grievances of national minorities?
- Does adopting a violent strategy pay off?

The course goes beyond case-specific knowledge by linking sub-state conflicts to various political themes and concepts.

The course will appeal to students that are interested in exploring intergroup relations, social diversity, centre-periphery dynamics and international relations.

Teaching methods/learning formats

The course will be taught in the form of a seminar. The sessions will primarily consist of plenary discussions among the students. Therefore, students are expected to prepare for each class by 1) critically reading the assigned literature and 2) formulating questions and topics that they would like to introduce to the discussions.

Students will receive written feedback on their two assignments, their research poster and their paper.

Manner & Form of Assessment and Assessment Requirements & Criteria

Case Studies (2 x 20%); Research Poster (10%); Term Paper (35 %); and Participation (15%).

The student will produce two short (5 double-spaced pages, approximately 1,500 words) case studies of approved sub-state conflicts. The first assignment must be on a case from a developed country and be submitted by 19 November, and the second assignment must explore a case from a developing country and be submitted by 10 December. The student must succinctly describe the case (e.g., who is the group behind the movement, their grievances, their demands, relations with the central state and other groups in the country, the intensity of the conflict, etc.) and link it to the themes that will be discussed in this course. Each assignment must be submitted via Turnitin on Canvas. No late assignments will be accepted. Further details will be provided in class.

The research poster will be based on the case studies that the student will produce. Students will be expected to summarise their cases and to highlight similarities and differences between them. The poster must be submitted by 23 December via email to m.medeiros@uva.nl. Further details will be provided in class.

The student will also produce a term paper on a topic of their choice that will be used to deepen their knowledge of the course material. It will consist of a synthesis of 13 double-spaced pages (approximately 4,000 words) of important studies on a research question based on one of the themes explored in the course. In order to get useful feedback, the student must present by 26 November an outline of their paper. The term paper must be submitted via Turnitin on Canvas by 15 January. More details will be provided in class.

Finally, the student's participation will be evaluated in each session based on class presence as well as the quality of their comments and questions.
