Special Notice

Beginning with our Fall Issue we will be doing an electronic version of the newsletter only. You can receive it in your email or by accessing it through our web site.

If you have been receiving a printed copy, we do hope that this will not be a great inconvenience to you, but with increased pricing and the difficulties associated with the printed version we have decided it is time for us to go electronic! So we are joining the 21st Century!

If this is a huge problem for you we can arrange to have one of our Board members print you a copy. Please stop by one of the bookstores and ask or send us an email to friendscmlibraries@att.net.

Thank you for your understanding.

The President's Message—Cheryl Fletcher

The world's your oyster when you're engaged with your local library. Consider a DIY project using items from the Library of Things, expand your mind through new genres, or explore the great outdoors by checking out a California State Park Pass. Summer is all about exploration. Let the library be your guide!

Summertime is bringing some changes to Mesa Verde Library and Friends' MV Bookstore. Our dynamic and creative lead librarian Vivian Strabala has retired from MV Library, and we were so fortunate to have her guide the library to great heights. The library will have a familiar face returning so please stop in and welcome back Tracy Li, who will replace Vivian Strabala as Head Librarian at Mesa Verde Library.

FOCML has been hard at work organizing a beautification project for the Mesa Verde Friends' Bookstore. Maurice Dollison arranged for Danny Cruz at Cali Construction to replace the very worn ramp & Michele Jett has been busy having the bookstore repainted.

May your summer be full of adventure and golden memories.

Best Regards,

Cheryl

Libraries in Finland

“Nordic countries like Finland continue to benefit from universally available and high-quality health, education and social support systems. Inequality of wellbeing is also low,” said Ilana Ron-Levey, managing director at Gallup.

It's probably not a coincidence that Finland also highly values their public libraries and invests in them accordingly.

The country spends approximately €60 per capita on its public library system each year, which is about four times as much as the UK and six times as much as Germany and nearly 40% more than the United States. For most Finns, libraries are like sanctuaries where people can access information independently while still feeling part of a community.

The Censorship Acceleration – from Every Library Institute

Censorship in libraries is not slowing down or hitting a plateau. In "The Censorship Acceleration", author and researcher Marianne Wood Forrest provides an in-depth analysis of how coordinated political, ideological, and religious forces have transformed the censorship landscape in America since 2020. Drawing on original research, expert analysis, and the latest data, this report highlights how book bans have evolved from isolated parental concerns into a comprehensive political strategy aimed at undermining public education, silencing marginalized voices, and promoting a national agenda of school privatization.

The report examines the rise of well-funded "parental rights" groups, such as Moms for Liberty, and the use of censorship as a tactic in the broader culture war. It charts the shifting strategies, language, and power dynamics associated with this new wave of book bans. Additionally, it discusses the concerning impact of Project 2025 policies on federal education and library funding, emphasizing that the struggle for intellectual freedom is now closely linked to the fight for democracy itself.

Key Takeaways in the Report:

- Book bans are increasingly motivated by powerful political and religious groups rather than by local parental concerns.
- Censorship campaigns are closely connected to school privatization and efforts against diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI).
- Coordinated campaigns are nationalizing what were previously local conflicts within school boards.
- Resistance is growing, particularly from student-led movements and states passing right-to-read legislation.
- The future of libraries, education, and civil liberties is at a critical juncture and requires urgent advocacy.

The Censorship Acceleration Report reframes the narrative surrounding book bans by linking the culture war to the privatization of public education and the erosion of essential democratic institutions. Whether you are a librarian, educator, journalist, policymaker, or concerned these escalating threats should concern us all.
