Gunselman’s Tavern: A Century of Local Legends & The Public House

Gunselman’s Tavern is not just a bar; it is a living piece of Fairview Park and Greater Cleveland history, established firmly on the corner of Lorain and West 215th Street. The building itself, constructed in 1920, has seen decades of local life, with whispers of its past including the era of Prohibition, hinted at by the old steel braces on its doors, suggesting a life as a hidden speakeasy.

The modern legacy began on December 11, 1936, when Henry Gunselman took over the existing Pastime Cafe. Henry’s tenure established the tavern’s reputation for a friendly atmosphere, cold beer, and the local spirit that allowed it to survive a gunpoint robbery and a major fire. During the Gunselman family years, the establishment was known for backing local leagues and Henry’s own horseshoe championship status.

The tavern remained a neighborhood staple through subsequent ownerships, famously serving as a trusted stop for tradesmen. The latest chapter began when a group of neighborhood friends purchased the building, deeply committed to preserving its character while modernizing the experience. They restored the original mahogany bar and wooden floors, ultimately reviving the kitchen for the first time since 1959 to serve comfort food classics—including the now award-winning burger.

Today, Gunselman’s stands as a thriving tribute to community, where generations gather, old stories mingle with new traditions, and the spirit of the classic American tavern endures.
