THE FLOW OF TIME

PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME

- The past cannot be changed.
- The amount of time remaining between the present moment and the death of the physical body is unknown and shrinking.
- The present is the only reality.
- Remembering the past occurs in the present.
- Planning for the future also occurs in the present.

PERCEPTION OF TIME

- Psychological time refers to how we perceive time passing, which can differ significantly from actual clock time. This perception is influenced by a variety of psychological factors.

SUBJECTIVE EXPERIENCE

How fast or slow time feels can change based on emotional states, engagement, and activity levels.

EXPLANATION OF PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME AS THE INDIVIDUAL'S INTERNAL AND SUBJECTIVE
DURATION.

Here are three examples that illustrate psychological time as the individual's internal and subjective perception of time duration:

- The "Time Dilation" Experience During Emergencies: People often report experiencing time slowing down during high-stress situations, such as car accidents or other emergencies. This phenomenon is a classic example of psychological time where the brain, due to heightened senses and increased adrenaline, processes information more rapidly, making the individual perceive that time is passing more slowly than usual. This altered perception allows for rapid reaction and decision-making in critical moments.

THE PERCEPTION OF TIME IN MEDITATION

- During deep meditation, individuals may lose awareness of chronological time. Meditators often report feeling like only a few minutes have passed when, in fact, a much longer period has elapsed. This experience highlights how psychological time can expand or contract independently of actual time, influenced by the individual's state of consciousness and focus.

AGING AND TIME PERCEPTION

- Many older adults report that time seems to pass more quickly as they age. This subjective acceleration of psychological time could be linked to the routine nature of daily activities or the decreased introduction of novel events compared to when they were younger. As people age, the years can start to blend together, creating a sensation that time is speeding up, demonstrating how psychological time can vary not just from situation to situation, but over the course of a lifetime as well.

PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME INFLUENCES AND IS INFLUENCED BY COGNITIVE PROCESSES, EMOTIONS, AND ENVIRONMENTAL FACTORS.

HERE ARE THREE EXAMPLES THAT DEMONSTRATE HOW PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME IS BOTH INFLUENCED BY AND INFLUENCES COGNITIVE PROCESSES, EMOTIONS, AND ENVIRONMENTAL FACTORS

INFLUENCE OF EMOTIONS ON TIME PERCEPTION

- Research has shown that emotional states significantly affect how we perceive time. For instance, when people experience fear, such as watching a scary movie, time seems to stretch, making a brief moment feel much longer. Conversely, joyful and engaging activities often make time seem to pass more quickly. This relationship between emotions and time perception is a fundamental aspect of psychological time, illustrating how our internal emotional state can warp our sense of duration.

ATTENTION AND TIME PERCEPTION

- Cognitive processes, especially attention, play a crucial role in the perception of time. When individuals are highly focused on a task that is absorbing, they are less aware of the passage of time — a phenomenon often referred to as being "in the flow." This altered perception occurs because cognitive resources are concentrated on the task at hand rather than on the tracking of time. Conversely, when a task is unengaging or when individuals are waiting and focusing on time itself, time can seem to crawl.

ENVIRONMENTAL INFLUENCES ON TIME PERCEPTION

- The environment can significantly affect how we perceive time. For example, in environments with high levels of sensory stimulation (such as a loud, crowded festival), time may seem to pass quickly. On the other hand, in stark, unstimulating environments (like waiting alone in a quiet, empty room), time may appear to drag. Additionally, environmental factors like daylight can influence our biological clocks, affecting our general perception of the passage of time throughout the day.

PERCEPTION OF TIME AND ENERGY MANAGEMENT

- Effective utilization of personal energy hinges on one's perception of time; when individuals feel time-rich, they are more likely to engage in activities that rejuvenate their energy and contribute positively to their well-being.

IMPACT OF ENERGY LEVELS ON TIME PERCEPTION

- High personal energy levels can make individuals feel as though time passes more quickly during engaging activities, enhancing their productivity and creativity, while low energy often makes time seem to drag, increasing feelings of drudgery and inefficiency.

PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME AND ENERGY ALLOCATION

Mindful management of psychological time allows for a balanced approach to energy expenditure, preventing burnout by allocating time for both productive tasks and restorative breaks, thereby maintaining long-term personal and professional health.

PRINCIPLE # 16 – UTILIZING ENERGY FOR BENEFIT VS. HARM (FLOW OF ENERGY RECOGNIZED)

- The concept of utilizing personal energy involves recognizing and directing one's mental, emotional, and physical resources towards constructive or destructive outcomes. When individuals harness their personal energy effectively, it can lead to enhanced productivity, creativity, and overall well-being, contributing positively to their lives and those around them. However, if mismanaged or directed towards negative pursuits, personal energy can result in burnout, stress, and a detrimental impact on both personal and social spheres, emphasizing the importance of mindful energy utilization.

CENTRAL CONCEPT OF PERSONAL TRANSFORMATION

WEEK 11 HOMEWORK: 3x5 card – read ONCE daily

The human mind, with its intricate workings and endless complexities, is a fascinating phenomenon that requires a substantial amount of energy to function. However, this energy can be drained by personal conflicts that arise both within and outside of ourselves. When we take steps to reduce and eventually eliminate the unnecessary dissipation of our inner energy, we can experience an extraordinary revitalization and conservation of our life force. This revitalized energy can then permeate every aspect (12 dimensions) of our lives, unobstructed and without disturbance, leading to a powerful foundation upon which limitless possibilities become available and realizable. – The Angel Wing, LLC
