Train Station Inspiration

This open air pavilion was inspired by the old southern railroad station in Downtown Greenville. The historic train station was the “Pride of Greenville” when it was built in 1905. Characterized by its distinctive brick and stone construction and unique spire, the old station was unfortunately demolished in 1988

The open-air design of this “Train Station” at Bridgeway Station was also influenced by the Wyche Pavilion, an iconic historic structure on the Reedy River in Downtown Greenville that pays tribute to the upstate’s industrial heritage. With its open-air configuration and easy accessibility , it has become a beloved community landmark. In a similar spirit, the “Train Station” here was built for the benefit of the Bridgeway Station community, designed to be enjoyed by all.
