Stack Equipment owner, Jim Lenahan, who purchased the company in 2018 through his Keystone Holdings, will remain as a stockholder.

David Osterhaus, who will remain as general manager, said, “We are excited for what the new ownership group brings to our business, which will allow us to grow the business, expand our reach, and provide even more painting and other refurbishing services.”

All other staff members will stay with the organization.

Established in 2008, Stack Equipment is the largest value-added lift dealer in the Midwest, the company said, selling a variety of equipment, including lifts that have been completely refinished – down to the paint job and decals. Stack Equipment has a one-of-a-kind indoor paint booth that allows the company to paint lifts and construction equipment of all sizes.

“The Stack Equipment team does an incredible job refurbishing equipment, and working with buyers to finance purchases,” added Joel Nettessheim, CPA, a Blackwell Capital Group managing director.

“There is high demand for this type of secondary-market equipment, and Stack Equipment has done an excellent job meeting that demand.”

All the inventory is fully described on the company’s new website, stackequipment.com, including pictures, year of manufacture, engine hours, purchase price, financing options, and more.

First Federal Bank financed the acquisition and N2

Advantage Law of Brookfield provided legal advice.

Terms of the transaction were not disclosed.
