

ADELPHI DALMORE 1998

21-Year-Old Highland 57.2 Vol

1 of only 132 bottles

A beautiful colour of golden hay. On the nose we found lots of fruit. Stone fruits, fruit salad, white peach and honeysuckle. Along with this it has a beeswax influence. On the palate it delivers honeydew melon, satsuma oranges, green apple and spearmint. It has fantastic mouthfeel and the finish is long and mouth cooling.

Dalmore

Dalmore might just be the most legendary distillery in the world, when it comes to creating stunning whisky with real provenance. Even the distillery itself looks incredible, as it overlooks the Cromarty Firth - an estuary from whose banks rise impressive slopes specked with green thicket and wooded copse.

The classic 12 and 15-year-old have long been a mainstay for lovers of rich highland whisky, and the master blender, Richard Paterson, is one of the industry's best loved celebrities. As well as working at Dalmore, Richard blends for Isle of Jura as well as Whyte and Mackay. Not one to shy from experimentation, he makes use of varying barley strains and age-old vintages, which he blends with all the talent of a modern-day alchemist.

The house style is undeniably one of rich, full-bodied whisky, with orange, chocolate and coffee flavours and Dalmore whisky is regularly enjoyed as a post dinner digestif.
