Safeway Is “Super Cleaning” Its East-of-the-River DC Stores

Gone are containers of spoiled meat and moldy produce at the Safeway in Northeast DC’s East River Park shopping center—at least for now.

On Thursday afternoon (August 24th), the grocery store bustled with an unusual amount of activity as employees—some from other stores—pulled expired items from the shelves, neatened displays of fresh fruits and vegetables, and scrubbed refrigerator cases from sudsy buckets. Discolorations on the walls were painted. In the meat section, a corporate employee took note of the improvements, snapping photos of freshly-packaged beef. “It’s good to see ya’ll finally here,” remarked one shopper.

The “super cleaning,” as Safeway calls it, comes in direct response to a recent surprise inspection by DC councilmember Vincent Gray. Read more from the Washingtonian.

Residents East of the River Team With Hospital

The Sibley Memorial Hospital, a member of Johns Hopkins Medicine, announced Tuesday, August 15 the launch of its Community Health Innovators in Residence Program. The new initiative aims to improve the health status of underserved communities in the District of Columbia in months rather than the typical years of traditional health improvement projects.

Under the program, up to four teams composed of residents and organizations in Wards 7 and 8 will be accepted into the first cohort. This year, Sibley convened a series of listening sessions with faith leaders, students, senior citizens and community leaders to discuss the health and wellness priorities of Wards 7 and 8 residents. They said the common themes that emerged ranged from access to healthy fruits and vegetables to the impact that isolation has on an individual.

Under the program, interested qualified non-profit organizations serving Wards 7 and 8 to apply to the first cohort. Read more at the Washington Informer. For detailed information about the Community Health Innovators in Residence Program, including the application, visit wardinfinity.com.
