Food Security Report 2024	Food	Defra	Report	12/12/2024		Despite global challenges, global food production and trade is broadly stable, and the domestic production ratio is largely unchanged in 2023. The impacts of climate change, biodiversity loss and water insecurity both at home and abroad remain pressing risks to food security. Market and supply volatility has weakened access to food and also reduced choice. The impacts of these issues are felt most acutely by particular demographic groups, including those with lower incomes, households with children and those with disabilities. The UK continues to be highly dependent on imports to meet consumer demand for fruit, vegetables and seafood.	Here

Soil nutrient balances 2023	Farming	Defra	Statistics	12/12/2024		Soil nutrient balances are used as a high-level indicator of farming's pressure on the environment and of how that pressure is changing over time. Significant nutrient surpluses are directly linked with losses to the environment. Estimates for 2023 show that both N and P balance were up slightly (4.8% and 4.5%) on 2023, but still significantly down on 2020. The differences can be accounted for by reduction in off take due to poorer cereal harvest.	Here

Chief Medical Officer's annual report 2024: Health in Cities	Food	DHSC	Report	12/12/2024		Cities have specific challenges for health seen in cities and some of the widest variety of potential opportunities. For individual citizens, acting in the collective interest is harder, and it is increasingly easy to lead a sedentary lifestyle and with access to poorer quality food. However, policy makers should be brave and note that is possible to design cities in such a way that they enhance health. The evidence base is there to achieve this; "Those who oppose specific evidence-based solutions should feel a responsibility to say what they would do instead to preserve the health of their fellow citizens."	Here
