

Creation: The Foundation of All Wisdom

Joseph B. Stephenson

Introduction

Since you have become a member of The Silent Circle, I can speak freely to you. As you have given me your word of honor that silence will be your password, this gives me freedom of expression, for I know you will not betray the trust I put in you—even as I will not betray the trust I have in you.

The Great Creator gave me a trust, and that trust will be fulfilled even if I must suffer death for it, for I would not fail Him. Here are His orders:

*Open thine eyes and thou shalt see all things beyond the ordinary vision.
Open thine ears and thou shalt hear wonderful truths.
Release thy tongue and I will speak truth through thee, for My Creation shall speak and they will not lie to thee.*

Your eyes, when opened, will see many things and will clear up the mysteries man has made—for mysteries are only man's mysteries. The Creator made no mysteries nor hid anything from man, only placed them so that man would not find them before they were needed. As man advances there are ever greater things in the storehouse for him, but only those who seek Wisdom shall find these things.

Seek Wisdom

In the beginning I saw that the storehouse would be filled—enough of everything that man might need as he travels on to the higher planes of life—and I did speak to man:

Seek Wisdom and all things shall be revealed unto thee, for there are many things that only the man of Wisdom can use wisely.

If the unwise were to find these great secrets—secrets only from the masses, because if they found them and used them unwisely—they would do untold harm to themselves and others. Today there are people who have found these secrets and use them for destruction instead of uplifting.

There is a most wonderful treasure chest for us to open and draw from if we seek and find it. The name of this treasure chest is Wisdom, Power, and Love.

The Journey Together

Now, my people—I call you mine because you have become one of my Circle of Silence—as we journey on together I will be your guide. We will go easily at first so as not to put a quart of water into a pint jug. I will measure the amount you can carry and will not burden your mind with an overload. Nor will I lead you into a path of mystery, but will take the things that have filled your mind with restless thinking and make them clear and simple to understand. When I hear Creation speak, I will pass it on to you.

The Voice of the River

As an illustration, let us listen to the river and see how simply it makes itself understood.

We sit upon the riverbank and I ask:

Why do you flow on? Don't you ever get tired?

The river replies:

No, I never get tired, for I am doing a useful work for the Creator's Creation. Without me, His creation would be useless, for I give life to all things—the trees, the flowers, the grass, the fields, and the things that man must live by. I am used for everything clean and everything dirty. Yet all of these things tend to make me unclean, for I receive the refuse of man and beast, and decomposed vegetation pours its filth into me.

The time soon comes when I feel so filthy and dirty that I must make haste to my Mother, the Ocean, where she will take the filth from me, purify me, and send me on my journey once more back to the places where I am needed.

Do you not think I should be happy when I see what I can do? Important when I know that no living thing or vegetation can live without me? Do I not hear the cry of the trees—"I am thirsty, come, my friend Water, and give us a drink!" Don't I hear the insects calling "Water!" And the man lost on the desert crying "Water, water, water!"

Yes, I hear all these things. Although I am happy most of the time for the good I do, I grow sad when I hear the voice of man, beast, and vegetation crying for me and I cannot reach them.

But I too have troubles and trials. First I am going smooth and gentle; then I feel a sort of pushing behind and I must hurry. Then I am dashed upon a rock and this makes me mad and I hurry to find my place again. Just as I settle, I find myself falling, falling. When I land, the water I fell into is rushing, squeezing, and fighting to gain liberty. Yet as soon as I free myself from the turmoil, I settle down again and quietly wend my way once more, hoping soon to see my Mother, the Sea.

At last I reach her and again she purifies me. Then I feel something pulling me—that something is the sun. I ask what it means to draw me from my Mother so soon. The sun replies:

"I am far above the earth and have great power of vision. I see so many places that need you, and I hear all living things calling for you. Since I cause their thirst, I feel it my duty to call you. If you will come I will form you into the most beautiful vapor. As the living things of the earth look up to you, they will see you in all your glory as you speed along, playing and changing colors, gliding in majestic purity and beauty. If you could see how they long and pray for you, how they thank you when you arrive, you would surely thank me for lifting you up and sending you to where you are most needed.”

And so I know my mission is great. Even though I have many rough journeys, many falls, and am polluted many times, I glorify in my mission and complain not.

Now, dear people of The Circle, you have read the voice of the river. Did it not speak the truth? And as we travel on together, we will ask all Creation to speak in turn. When all things have spoken that cannot lie, then we will ask Man why he, alone in Creation, does and will lie—and maybe he will speak a few truths.

Silence and the Secret

When you read these beautiful thoughts and keep them to yourself, you will discover a most wonderful secret. Yes, a secret known consciously to very few. There is a great principle behind this.

Silence means closing all the escape valves. When they are closed, these thoughts will start their work of trying to escape. Though you did not memorize them, you will not forget a word. As they move through your mind, your mind will form thoughts of its own that you did not know you were capable of. You will be surprised to find what a wonderful mind you have.

Keep your safety valves closed only until you feel enough steam pressure and fire for your boiler. Then you may open the valves and tell everything you know to anyone who will listen. The more you tell, the more you will receive, for you will have learned how to keep the fire going. Once you are ready to receive Wisdom, the Voice of Wisdom will speak to you. Once you have found this Fountain of Love, then—and only then—will you know what Love means.

Higher Living

This Circle is built upon these principles and exists for the good of humanity. It will change your thoughts from the lower life to the higher life. Instead of looking for small faults in others, you will look for their goodness. Instead of mistrusting everyone, you will trust, knowing that those who betray trust cannot face their own reflection.

Let us throw off the cloak that hides our natural selves. Clothes and position do not make the man. Let us look upon the common laborer as we look upon the highest official. If the laborer does his work well and the man in his “higher” position does not, who is greater? Positions are many, from highest to lowest, but each must be filled. Judge not harshly the man who fills the lower place.

If the principle behind one’s position is clean, go on, my friend. If you see a loophole for doubt, do not necessarily give up your post, but by using the power of this Silent Circle, create it into something worthwhile and noble.

The Silent Work of Reform

The Circle exists for the lifting of the masses, and its power will be so strong and peaceful that it will in time command the situation—not by oppression or loud voice, but by its great silent, peaceful way.

We have a duty to ensure that our laws are made for the true liberty of the people. Only by your silence can our State be made as the Creator would wish. Suffering humanity must also come under our care. As each member proves their worth, the Head of the Circle will make them a Creative Healer. We need thousands to quietly, silently lay their hands upon the sick and use the greatest power of Creation.

I hear thousands of voices crying, Come and help us—come and relieve our pains.

But I am one man and cannot reach them alone. Therefore I send you, my dear Members of the Circle, that you may reach them.

America and the Eagle

Be loyal to our President. How proud I am of him, how wonderful and great. If he had not been born, the Creation could never have been completed. Let us watch and create strength for him that he may fulfill his position to perfection.

Consider the eagle on our nation's coin. When this country sought and gained its freedom, the Creator said:

I will form a new nation. I will fill its storehouse with everything found in other lands combined. Its people shall come from every nation. I will make this nation the light of the world, spreading peace and contentment, offering friendship without seeking enmity.

Other nations chose beasts of strength—England the lion, Russia the bear. But our country chose the eagle. All other beasts remain on the ground, but the eagle soars to unknown heights. It can take the young of other nations' beasts, but no beast can take its own. Looking down not with disdain but with love, the eagle says:

Come to me, I am your friend. I did not steal your children; they came of their own accord and I sheltered and educated them.

Yet even the eagle is not always happy, for there is an enemy among her children trying to soil the nation's laws and lead them astray. The only way to conquer this enemy is to work in silence—to place clean men in every office, to keep our emblem unstained and soaring high.

If you could see as I see, you would know America's lofty goal: to become the true friend of all nations, the nation of nations.

The Source of True Wisdom

You may ask, How can such great accomplishments be achieved? Only through the silence of individuals. The enemy cannot stop this movement, though it may try to delay it. We must watch and wait, work diligently and surely, to regain the freedoms for which our forefathers gave their lives.

Many will wonder how someone without formal education can speak these truths. But if I had been schooled in men's books, my mind would not have been my own. I have not read another man's book since I was sixteen. In time I will tell you how I acquired the wisdom of all Creation and found the principles behind all things—truths that education alone has not discovered.

It took George Stephenson to find the principle of the first engine, James Watt to discover the power of steam, and Robert Fulton to realize the steamboat. Seventy-five percent of our greatest inventions have come from men without formal education—men with free minds bringing original thoughts. Education then refines and carries those principles forward. The two must work hand in hand.

Where will the next great invention come from when everyone must pass through the highest grades of schooling? I watch with interest. In future writings I will explain how invention arises and how ideas are first received.

For now, remember the three greatest forces that man can harness for his own and others' benefit: Wisdom, Power, and Love.
