Is Your House a House of Wisdom?

By Grandma Jeddah

School is back in! But things are a little different this school year, isn't it? Many children are learning Islamic studies, math, and reading in their house. Did you know there was once a famous Muslim library called The House of Wisdom?

The House of Wisdom, located in Baghdad, Iraq, started during the rule of one of the most famous Muslim leaders, Caliph Harun-ul-Rashid. It continued to grow and become even better known with his son al-Ma'mun.

If you could travel back in time over 1,000 years, you would see authors, writers, and scientists from all over the world traveling along the dusty desert roads toward The House of Wisdom. They were thirsty for water and wisdom. Once they arrived, they sat, read, and listened to important talks from one another. In this way, they learned much knowledge from others who had come.

Hey! You can make your own house a House of Wisdom—a place where you gain great knowledge and pass it on to others! Study hard, and then teach others in your home what you've learned.
