Workshop Offerings

Aligning Instruction to State Standards

This workshop is designed to provide participants with practice unpacking state standards and understanding how the standards are applied throughout a lesson. The workshop is designed for the following content areas: literacy, math, science, and social studies.

Crafting Writers

The Crafting Writers workshop is designed to help participants unpack the writing process for students so that they can learn how to write in specific text types. Teachers learn how to help students see writing as a process. The workshop will show teachers how to move students from drafting to publishing a complete piece. It will also focus on providing scaffolds for writing.

Rethinking Reading Instruction

Rethinking reading instruction allows students to engage fully in a text and unpack the authors' words. Through a focus on close reading, read aloud-thinks, shared reading and independent reading; participants walk away with a set of strategies to employ on a daily basis to help students develop as critical readers of complex texts.

The Art of Math Stations

Throughout the workshop, participants will develop an understanding around the purpose of math stations. Through math stations, participants will unpack grade level standards, discuss and apply how the work station can help provide tools for remediation and application.

Rethinking the Math Block

The math block allows students to work through a structure to engage the learner in developing automaticity around math facts and applying math to real world situations. Through this workshop, participants will develop a structure for the math block and plan a lesson collaboratively to present to their colleagues using the redesigned structure.
