WHAT IS THE GIC?

Welcome to the Global Information Consortium (GIC), an initiative co-founded by ARMA International and RIMPA Global. The consortium aims to unite like-minded organizations across the globe in advocating for the effective and ethical management of information.

The mission of the GIC is to create a global community that supports the integration of information management into the corporate and government footprint. By joining forces with organizations that share the vision of the GIC, we work to positively transform the information management profession.

By being part of the GIC, we aim to:

- strengthen networks
- raise awareness
- influence policy
- support career advancement
- foster collaboration
- promote best practices in information management

In this dynamic global community, we foster innovation and drive the profession to new heights, and strive to have representation from every geographic region. If you're interested in becoming part of this, please refer to the GIC application process detailed in the prospectus.

Join us to help shape the future of information management with like-minded organizations globally. Let's make a lasting impact on the information management landscape.

VISION AND MISSION

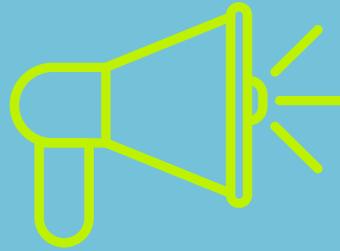

Vision

Create a global community that will advocate for the effective and ethical management of information; a world where information management is embedded in the corporate and government footprint.

Mission

Advocate for best practices in information management, leveraging collective expertise to raise awareness of the importance of information governance and to influence policy at the local, national, and international levels.

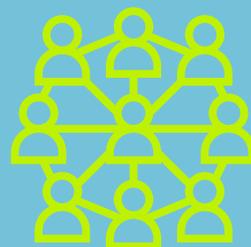

GIC GOALS

Be the Global Voice of the Information
Management Profession

Support the Career Advancement of Information Professionals

Establish a Global Community to Support and Advance the Work of the Organization

GIC GOALS

Be the Global Voice of the Information Management Profession

Strengthen Networks:

The consortium aims to enhance information governance, collaboration, and knowledge sharing through the establishment and strengthening of networks comprised of professionals and organizations. This is achieved by establishing partnerships with other organizations and professional associations to increase its reach and impact, hosting events or webinars to gather professionals from different sectors and regions, and building connections with other organizations that share similar values and can provide mutually beneficial opportunities. These efforts leverage the contributions of both staff and volunteers.

Raise Awareness:

Raising awareness regarding the significance of information management and highlighting the risks of poor information governance among policymakers, decision-makers, and the general public, is instrumental in delivering better information governance. This could include comprehensive awareness campaigns, targeted messaging, and worldwide celebrations that recognize Information Management professionals. Establishing a global approach to education through these activities can help develop and promote successful Information Management professionals. An example of a communication pipeline to deal with current events could also be developed, allowing information governance stakeholders to improve their understanding of Information Management trends.

Influence Policy:

One of the crucial responsibilities of the GIC is to influence policy. In order to achieve this, advocacy for policies that promote effective information management, privacy protection, and fair access to information should be done. Collaboration with other advocacy organizations is also necessary to build a strong coalition for information management advocacy. Providing input and feedback on proposed legislation or policy changes related to information management should also be done. Lastly, finding opportunities for political outreach to promote the importance Information Management and its role in shaping policies and practices is crucial.

GIC GOALS

Support the Career Advancement of Information Professionals

Develop Research:

The development of research helps foster innovation in information management, leading to new technologies, methods, and tools that support effective information governance. Organizations can promote this development by providing grants or funding for research projects aimed at exploring emerging trends and challenges. Hosting conferences or symposia is another way to showcase new research and innovation in the field. Finally, publishing research reports on emerging trends and challenges in information management can help organizations to stay up-to-date on the latest developments.

Trends:

To keep up with the evolving demands, it's important for the consortium to stay current with emerging trends in information management and related fields. To achieve this, a comprehensive global survey should be launched to gauge the scope and diversity of the information management industry. Additionally, a resource library or database can be developed to track developments in areas closely related to information management, such as data privacy, cybersecurity, and AI ethics. Insights gained from trend monitoring can then be used to develop new resources and programs.

GIC GOALS

Establish a Global Community to Support and Advance the Work of the Organization

Foster Collaboration:

Fostering collaboration is crucial to building a community of information management professionals worldwide. To achieve this goal, several strategies can be employed, such as creating an online forum or platform for experts to communicate and exchange knowledge. Networking events and forums can also connect professionals from different regions and sectors. Encouraging the sharing of success stories and case studies is essential to inspire innovation and best practices. Creating a sound framework for business partners to advance the field of information management and support industry thought leaders is also fundamental. Finally, assessing potential collaborations with external organizations and business partners based on specific needs and priorities is vital for the success of the GIC.

Promote Best Practices:

Best practices in information management should be encouraged across all sectors. The adoption of industry standards ensures quality and consistency. It is important to document and define industry certifications and programs to establish global certification. Standardizing information management terms and language is also beneficial. Guidelines and standards for information management best practices should be developed and disseminated. Collaborating with industry associations and standards organizations is also highly recommended to promote the adoption of best practices.

WHAT ORGANIZATIONS SHOULD JOIN?

The field of information management (IM) encompasses a wide range of sectors and disciplines dedicated to the ethical and efficient management of information. The Global Information Consortium (GIC) aims to provide a comprehensive view of information management by including the following sectors within its consortium. The specific sectors incorporated into the consortium may vary based on the goals, industry focus, and the specific requirements of its members. However, it is crucial for the GIC to ensure a diverse organizational representation across these sectors to ensure a comprehensive coverage of the IM industry.
