INSIGHT INTO FORESIGHT

HAPPY HOLIDAYS!

I wish you, your families, and colleagues, a holiday season full of celebration, laughter and fun. This year, I am especially thankful for the awesome year Foresight has had including the abundance of work that began in late spring and carried me into early winter. Additionally, through that time, there has been numerous new customers and prospective clients. As I look forward into 2026, I am excited for the opportunity to help all those who find value in Foresight™.

FORMING FUNDAMENTALS

DESIGN FOR FLATNESS

In our last article, the stage was set for a series about strip layout configurations and tool techniques that impact product consistency and conformity. These topics correlate with our previous series on coil conditioning. If you need those articles resent, please request them via email at info@innovativeforesight.com.

Most metal stamped products have a flatness constraint somewhere on the print. It is imperative that the part be oriented to the feed direction with respect to anticipated coil set and camber conditions. If consideration is given to this early in the design process, it can make the difference between frequent adjustments and a well performing tool. When is the last time your tool designer worked with your material purchasing agent? In our next issue we will highlight when and how this can make a difference!
