1ST ANNIVERSARY

Dear Karen,

Recently I have been a poor husband. I am sorry. I am blaming you for my own mess deeds. Had I conducted myself in accordance with the principles my parents taught me and those I learned in the Marines, much of what has happened lately would never had.

What I am most sorry for is the way I have hurt our relationship. I really love you and you have only tried to help and be a good wife at every turn.

I have made so many bad decisions the past few years, that today, on my anniversary, I can't even afford to buy you a gift. There are so many things I want to do with you, but each day I see that I have less of a chance to do so.

I can't even be happy around you or any one because I am so unhappy. I would like to take you places like Turkey to see the fantastic sights of Istanbul or to Florence to see the great works of past artists like de Vinci & Angelo. As to Spain to see the beautiful Mediterranean coast. All these I have seen & want so desperately to share them with you. But I can't. I always saw my self as a good husband, knowing how to treat a wife, but now I am doing such a poor job at that also. I know what to do but I just can't bring myself to do it. I know you see me with different eyes, but I hope I can change that over the years.

When we wed, I really meant forever. I am not asking for forgiveness, that I don't need. What I need is you to see me as the way I used to be and can still be - loving, caring, honest, trustworthy and a good husband. I know this will take some time to do but I hope you will stay.

Love
Peter
