Series Title: Depolarizing America: One Happier, Humbl

As a local pastor here in Agawam — and as someone who's married to a Jamaican woman who reminds me daily that difference can be a blessing, however challenging it may be — I've learned that humility isn't weakness. It's strength under control. It's what allows two people, or two parties, to stay in relationship even when they don't see eye to eye. While my columns in this series will focus on depolarizing us — to start the healing process by placing party affiliations in their proper place, reminding us that we are humans first, Americans second and "democrat" or "republican" a distant third — it is not a call for folks to back down from their convictions. If you feel called to act, that is your right, just please don't do it at the expense of the rights of others. In short, I'm not trying to make readers gentler lambs — I'm trying to make them stronger, more self-aware citizens who can stand firm without hate. And while I'm under no illusion that my five-column series will solve the great American divide by itself, I believe it offers some tangible ways for each of us to begin the work of understanding our own biases, the beliefs held by members of the other party, and to start to bridge the gap between us. If you are one of the many who would like to see this experiment succeed — both the experiment of depolarization and the grand experiment that is America itself — I urge you to write in with your comments. As I said, this is just a start. A start that must come one happier, humbler soul at a time.

Column 1 – Step 1: Stop clinging so tightly to our political labels

I am not a Republican. Nor am I a Democrat.

I am neither of these things, because they don't exist.

Not really.

Now you may say "Well, I'M a Republican, and I'm proud to be one!" Or "I'M a Democrat and you can't tell me I'm not!"

And, in a sense, you would be right, of course.

In a sense.

You see, my brothers, my sisters, my fellow Americans, what I'm getting at here is that we are not the labels we so readily cling to. The labels we are willing to fight for, die for, and, in some cases, kill for.

But what does it mean to BE a "Democrat" or a "Republican."

Let's examine that more closely.

If we say, for instance, we ARE a Democrat, does that mean we believe EVERYTHING the Democratic party platform says at any given moment?

I mean even the head of the Democratic National Committee would have a hard time agreeing with that! It would mean that he or she had no core values, because, as we know, the party platform is something that changes over time.

You'll have to agree, the same thing applies to those of us who call ourselves "Republicans." (We'll discuss the fact that none of us are truly "Independent" later, as we all need each other to succeed as a society.)

Now if you want to counter and say that calling ourselves a "Democrat" or "Republican" really means you tend to vote for the candidate of that party, then I'd agree.

The problem is that we don't stop to think about this most of the time. We are wed to our "tribe" and we have been taught – and are constantly being programmed to think – that the members of the "other" tribe are evil.

I said I was neither a Democrat or a Republican or an Independent. So what am I?

I am a human being who chooses not to identify with any political party's label.

But even before that, I am a Child of God.

As the French mystic Pierre Teilard de Chardin famously said, "We are not human beings going through a Spiritual experience, we are Spiritual Beings going through a human experience."

Vocationally, I am a Pastor in a Protestant Church. I am a psychotherapist in private practice. And I am an author of a book on humility. A book with 70 "humility paths" or "mental happiness tools" – many of which have the power to depolarize this great nation of ours.

For after being a Child of God – a Jewish Christian with Buddhist tendencies, as I like to call myself – after being a human being, I am and have always been an American.

My fellow Americans, if we are going to come together, as the Beatles sang, we are all going to have to start by looking at the man [or woman] in the mirror. Something Michael Jackson taught us.

For the answer to our polarization problem isn't "out there" but "in here." That is, it has to start with each one of us letting go of our tribal affiliations or at the very least, recognizing them for what they are and are not.

Now I'm not suggesting you give up your party membership. Just that you realize that it's not something you're locked into from birth – like, say, being a human being or even being an American. For while some people actually give up their American citizenship, the vast majority of us have no intention of doing that anytime soon.

So let's start just by recognizing we don't ALWAYS agree with EVERYTHING our chosen party stands for. And let's also recognize that those who follow the "other" party – we are essentially a two-party system, after all, independents just being people who can't make up their minds (I'm kidding, of course) – let's recognize that those people on the other side of the aisle ALSO don't agree with everything their party stands for at any given moment.

This is just a start, but I think it is a good one. In future columns I'll suggest a number of ways we can work on ourselves to heal our national divide (for, as I said before, the work has to start "within.")

In the meantime I'd like to leave you with an exercise and one question you can respond to Exercise: Stop and think about how much you attach political labels to yourself and others. Then stop and think about how much more complex you are.

Question to respond to: "If you are more complex than your party affiliation, do you think the same can be said of those who are on the other side of the political divide? Why or why not?"

MODERATOR'S NOTE

It's been a tough winter so far with blizzards and extreme cold causing us to cancel two Sunday services and reschedule the annual meeting. As I write this I am recovering from one of the worst colds I've had in a long time and it seems that it will never end. But I think of seeing all of you at church someday when I'm feeling better and the words of the Apostle Paul come to mind:

"I thank my God upon every remembrance of you..." - Philippians 1:3 NKJV

At our January meeting the Executive Board was briefed on the many planned fundraising activities, reviewed financial results for 2025 and made preparations for the annual meeting which was rescheduled to February 22. I expect to be in much better health by then and pray the Lord keep you safe, warm and healthy.

Yours in Christ,
David Bertagnolli, Moderator

Psalm 121

I lift up my eyes to the hill
From whence comes my help
My help comes from the Lord
Who made heaven and earth

He will not allow your foot to be moved
He who keeps you will not slumber
Behold he who keeps Israel
Shall neither slumber nor sleep

The Lord is your keeper
The Lord is your shade at your right hand
The sun shall not strike you by day
Nor the moon by night

The Lord shall preserve you from all evil
He shall, preserve your soul
The Lord shall preserve your going out and coming in
From this time forward and for evermore.

This psalm is from the Song of Ascents in the Old Testament. These have also been called Pilgrim Songs . Some of these songs were written by King David and another by Solomon and other songs remain anonymous.

These songs were written to offer encouragement and assurance of God's help and protection to all believers.

While we go through life's journey and our walk with the Lord let us be ever mindful of His word to us. He is always watching over us directing us.
May this psalm be a blessing to us every day as we experience His blessings

Debra Pond
Deacon
